

Annex to the letter dated 26 December 2008 from the Permanent Representative of Azerbaijan to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General

Report on the fundamental norm of the territorial integrity of States and the right to self-determination in the light of Armenia's revisionist claims

1. The present Report provides the view of the Government of the Republic of Azerbaijan on the interrelationship between the legal norm of the territorial integrity of states and the principle of self-determination in international law in the context of the revisionist claims made by the Republic of Armenia ("Armenia").
2. Such revisionist claims have been made with regard to the Nagorny Karabakh¹ conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan and essentially assert that Nagorny Karabakh did not form part of the new state of Azerbaijan on independence and this is maintained by various legal arguments, including the principle of self-determination.
3. The Nagorny Karabakh conflict, in short, is one where part of the internationally recognised territory of the Republic of Azerbaijan ("Azerbaijan") has been captured and held by Armenia, whether directly by its own forces or indirectly by forces forming part of the "Nagorny Karabakh Republic" ("NKR"). This latter entity is a self-proclaimed "state", supported by Armenia and essentially under its direction and control. It is entirely unrecognised as such, even by Armenia.
4. This Report examines first the concept of the territorial integrity of states; secondly, the evolution and status of the principle of the self-determination of peoples; and finally, the nature of Armenian claims particularly with regard to Nagorny Karabakh.
5. Essentially, the conclusion of the Report is that Armenia's claims as to the detachment of Nagorny Karabakh from Azerbaijan are incorrect as a matter of international law and Armenia is in violation of international legal principles concerning inter alia the norm of territorial integrity.

A. The Fundamental Norm of the Territorial Integrity of States

I. International Practice

a) Introduction

6. States are at the heart of the international legal system and the prime subjects of international law. However one defines the requirements of statehood, the criterion of territory is indispensable. It is inconceivable to envisage a state as a person in international law bearing rights and duties without a substantially agreed territorial framework. As Oppenheim has noted, “a state without a territory is not possible”.²

¹ The term "Nagorny Karabakh" is a Russian translation of the original name in Azerbaijani language – "Dağlıq Qarabağ" (pronounced as "Daghlygh Garabagh"), which literally means mountainous Garabagh. In order to avoid confusion the widely referred term "Nagorny Karabakh" will be used hereinafter.

7. In any system of international law founded upon sovereign and independent states, the principle of the protection of the integrity of the territorial expression of such states is bound to assume major importance.³ Together with the concept of the consequential principle of non-intervention, territorial integrity is crucial with respect to the evolution of the principles associated with the maintenance of international peace and security. It also underlines the decentralized state-orientated character of the international political system and both reflects and manifests the sovereign equality of states as a legal principle.

8. Territorial integrity and state sovereignty are inextricably linked concepts in international law. They are foundational principles. Unlike many other norms of international law, they can only be amended as a result of a conceptual shift in the classical and contemporary understanding of international law.

9. It was emphasised in the Island of Palmas case, arguably the leading case on the law of territory and certainly the starting-point of any analysis of this law, that:

“Territorial sovereignty... involves the exclusive right to display the activities of a state”,⁴ while:

“Sovereignty in the relations between states signifies independence. Independence in relation to a portion of the globe is the right to exercise therein, to the exclusion of any other state, the functions of a state. The development of the national organisation of states during the last few centuries, and as a corollary, the development of international law, have established this principle of the exclusive competence of the state in regard to its own territory in such a way as to make it the point of departure in settling most questions that concern international relations”.⁵

² R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts (eds.), Oppenheim’s International Law, 9th ed., 1992, p. 563.

³ Oppenheim notes that “the importance of state territory is that it is the space within which the state exercises its supreme, and normally exclusive, authority”, ibid., p. 564. Bowett regards this principle as fundamental in international law and an essential foundation of the legal relations between states, Self-Defence in International Law, Manchester, 1958, p. 29. See, generally, J. Castellino and S. Allen, Title to Territory in International Law: A Temporal Analysis, Aldershot, 2002; G. Distefano, L’Ordre International entre Légalité et Effectivité: Le Titre Juridique dans le Contentieux Territorial, Paris, 2002; R. Y. Jennings, The Acquisition of Territory in International Law, Manchester, 1963; M. N. Shaw, “Territory in International Law”, 13 Netherlands YIL, 1982, p. 61; N. Hill, Claims to Territory in International Law and Relations, London, 1945; J. Gottman, The Significance of Territory, Charlottesville, 1973; and S. P. Sharma, Territorial Acquisition, Disputes and International Law, The Hague, 1997.

⁴ 1 RIAA 829, 839 (1928).

⁵ Ibid., at 838.

10. Accordingly, the concept of state sovereignty can only be exercised through exclusive territorial control so that such control becomes the cornerstone of international law, while the exclusivity of control means that no other state may exercise competence within the territory of another state without the express consent of the latter. To put it another way, the development of international law upon the basis of the exclusive authority of the state within an accepted territorial framework meant that territory became “perhaps the fundamental concept of international law”.⁶ This principle is two-sided. It establishes both the supervening competence of the state over its territory and the absence of competence of other states over that same territory. Recognition of a state’s sovereignty over its territory imports also recognition of the sovereignty of other states over their territory. The International Court clearly underlined in the Corfu Channel case, that, “[b]etween independent states, respect for territorial sovereignty is an essential foundation of international relations”.⁷

11. These principles have been further discussed by the world court. The Permanent Court of International Justice, for example, emphasised in the Lotus case that:

“The first and foremost restriction imposed by international law upon a state is that – failing the existence of a permissive rule to the contrary – it may not exercise its power in any form in the territory of another state”,⁸

while the International Court underlined in the Corfu Channel case “every state’s obligation not to allow knowingly its territory to be used for acts contrary to the rights of other states”⁹ and noted in the Asylum case that “derogation from territorial sovereignty cannot be recognised unless its legal basis is established in each case”.¹⁰

12. Thus, despite the rise of globalisation, whether of commercial or trade relations or in matters concerning human rights or the environment, territorial sovereignty continues to constitute the lynch pin of the international legal system.

13. The juridical requirement, therefore, placed upon states is to respect the territorial integrity of other states. It is an obligation flowing from the sovereignty of states and from the equality of states. This has been reflected in academic writing. One leading writer has noted that “[f]or states, respect for their territorial integrity is paramount... This rule plays a fundamental role in international

⁶ D. P. O’Connell, International Law, 2nd ed., London, 1970, vol. I, p. 403.

⁷ ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 35.

⁸ PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, p. 18.

⁹ ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 6, 22.

¹⁰ ICJ Reports 1950, pp. 266, 275.

relations”.¹¹ It has also been stated that “[f]ew principles in present-day international law are so firmly established as that of the territorial integrity of States”.¹²

14. It is, of course, important to note that this obligation is not simply to protect territory as such or the right to exercise jurisdiction over territory or even territorial sovereignty, the norm of respect for the territorial integrity of states imports an additional requirement and this is to sustain the territorial wholeness or definition or delineation of particular states. It is a duty placed on all states to recognise that the very territorial structure and configuration of a state must be respected.

15. Further, respect for the territorial integrity of states may be seen as a rule of jus cogens, certainly that aspect of the rule that prohibits aggression against the territorial integrity of states possesses the status of a peremptory norm.¹³

b) Societal Basis for the Norm of Territorial Integrity

16. The policy underlying the doctrine of respect for the territorial integrity of states may be seen both in terms of the very nature of state sovereignty and in terms of the perceived need for stability in international relations, specifically with regard to territorial matters. In so far as the first is concerned, the doctrine of state sovereignty has at its centre the concept of sovereign equality, which has been authoritatively defined in terms of the following propositions:

- “(a) States are judicially equal;
- (b) Each State enjoys the rights inherent in full sovereignty;
- (c) Each State has the duty to respect the personality of other States;
- (d) The territorial integrity and political independence of the State are inviolable;
- (e) Each State has the right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems;
- (f) Each State has the duty to comply fully and in good faith with its international obligations and to live in peace with other States”.¹⁴

17. In addition to constituting, therefore, one of the key elements in the concept of sovereign equality, territorial integrity has been seen as essential in the context of the stability and predictability of the international legal system as a whole based as it is upon sovereign and independent states territorially delineated. The importance of territorial integrity is reflected in the key concept of the stability of boundaries which, it has been written, constitutes “an overarching postulate of the ¹¹ M.G.Kohen, “Introduction” in M.G.Kohen (ed.), Secession: International Law Perspectives, Cambridge, 2006, p. 6.

¹² See the Opinion on the “Territorial Integrity of Quebec in the Event of the Attainment of Sovereignty” by Professors Franck, Higgins, Pellet, Shaw and Tomuschat on 8 May 1992, para. 2.16, <<http://www.uni.ca/library/5experts.html>>.

¹³ See further below, para. 66 and following.

¹⁴ Declaration on Principles of International Law 1970, General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV).

international legal system and one that both explains and generates associated legal norms”.¹⁵ The International Court, for example, has referred particularly to “the permanence and stability of the land frontier” in the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case,¹⁶ to the need for “stability and finality” in the Temple of Preah Vihear case,¹⁷ and to the “stability and permanence” of boundaries in the Aegean Sea Continental Shelf case.¹⁸ Each of these declarations underscores the importance of the core principle of respect for the territorial integrity of states.

18. The International Court explained the rationale behind this as follows:

“when two countries establish a frontier between them, one of the primary objects is to achieve stability and finality. This is impossible if the line so established can, at any moment, and on the basis of a continuously available process, be called in question”.¹⁹

19. The point was emphasised by the Arbitral Tribunal in the Beagle Channel case, where it was noted that:

“a limit, a boundary, across which the jurisdictions of the respective bordering states may not pass, implied definitiveness and permanence”.²⁰

c) The Norm of Territorial Integrity as Enshrined in International Instruments of a Global Nature

20. A number of key instruments referred to the norm of territorial integrity in the nineteenth and early twentieth century. For example, at the Vienna Congress of 1815 the neutrality and territorial integrity of Switzerland were guaranteed,²¹ while the London Protocol 1852 guaranteed that of Denmark and the Treaty of Paris 1856 that of the Ottoman Empire.²² Further the Treaty of 2 November 1907 recognised the independence and territorial integrity of Norway.

21. The final of President Woodrow Wilson’s Fourteen Points delivered to Congress on 8 January 1918 referred to the need to establish a general association of nations under specific covenants for the purpose of “affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and ¹⁵ M.N. Shaw, “The Heritage of States: The Principle of Uti Possidetis Juris Today”, 67 British Year Book of International Law, 1996, pp. 75, 81.

¹⁶ ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 66.

¹⁷ ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 33.

¹⁸ ICJ Reports, 1978, pp. 3, 36.

¹⁹ Temple of Preah Vihear, ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 34.

²⁰ HMSO, 1977, p. 11.

²¹ See e.g. Markus Kutter, Die Schweizer und die Deutschen (Frankfurt/M.: Fischer, 1997), pp. 97–105 cited in B. Schoch, “Switzerland – A Model for Solving Nationality Conflicts?”, Peace Research Institute, Frankfurt, 2000, p. 26 and Edmund Jan Osmańczyk and Anthony Mango, Encyclopedia of the United Nations and International Agreements, 3rd ed., 2004, vol. 4, p. 2294.

²² Ibid.

small states alike”.²³ This constituted a key inspiration with regard to the creation of the League of Nations.

22. Article 10 of the Covenant of the League of Nations provided that:

“The Members of the League undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all Members of the League. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression the Council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled”.

23. It is to be noted that the Treaty of Mutual Guarantee between Germany, Belgium, France, Great Britain and Italy in 1925 (the Locarno Pact) provided explicitly for the maintenance of the territorial status quo resulting from the frontiers between Germany and Belgium and between Germany and France, and the inviolability of these frontiers as fixed by or in pursuance of the Versailles Treaty of Peace 1919.

24. In the Charter of the United Nations, the following provisions are particularly relevant. Article 2 (1) provides that the Organisation itself is based on “the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members”, while article 2 (4) declares that “[a]ll Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state ...”. The latter principle is, of course, one of the core principles of the UN. It is discussed later in this Report in more detail.²⁴

25. The Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes 1982 reaffirms in its preamble the “principle of the Charter of the United Nations that all States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations” and states in point 4 that:

“States parties to a dispute shall continue to observe in their mutual relations their obligations under the fundamental principles of international law concerning the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of States, as well as other generally recognized principles and rules of contemporary international law”.

26. The Declaration on the Right to Development adopted by the General Assembly on 4 December 1986 in resolution 41/128 called in article 5 for states to take resolute action to eliminate “threats against national sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity”. General Assembly resolution 46/182, dated 19 December 1991, adopting a text on Guiding Principles on Humanitarian Assistance, provides in paragraph 3 that “[t]he sovereignty, territorial integrity and national unity of States must be fully respected in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. In this context, humanitarian assistance should be provided with the consent of the affected country and in principle on the basis of an appeal by the affected country”. Further, resolution 52/112 concerning the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the rights of peoples to self-determination, adopted by the General Assembly on 12 December 1997, explicitly reaffirmed “the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of states...”.

²³ <http://wwi.lib.byu.edu/index.php/President_Wilson%27s_Fourteen_Points>.

²⁴ See below, para. 66 and following.

27. The UN Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly on 8 September 2000,²⁵ noted the rededication of the heads of state and of government gathered at the UN to supporting inter alia “all efforts to uphold the sovereign equality of all States, [and] respect for their territorial integrity and political independence”. This Declaration was reaffirmed in the World Summit Outcome 2005, in which world leaders agreed “to support all efforts to uphold the sovereign equality of all states, [and] respect their territorial integrity and political independence”.²⁶ In its turn, this provision in the World Summit Outcome was explicitly reaffirmed by the UN Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy 2006.²⁷

28. References to territorial integrity may also be found in multilateral treaties of a global character. For example, the preamble to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty 1968 includes the following provision:

“Recalling that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, States must refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations”.

29. Further, article 301 of the Convention on the Law of the Sea 1982 provides that:

“In exercising their rights and performing their duties under this Convention, states parties shall refrain from any threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the principles of international law embodied in the Charter of the United Nations”, while article 19 of that Convention provides that the passage of a foreign ship through the territorial sea of a coastal sea “shall be considered to be prejudicial to the peace, good order or security of the ²⁵ General Assembly resolution 55/2.

²⁶ General Assembly resolution 60/1, para. 5.

²⁷ General Assembly resolution 60/288. See also General Assembly resolutions 57/337 on the Prevention of Armed Conflict which reaffirmed the Assembly’s commitment to the principles of the political independence, the sovereign equality and the territorial integrity of states; 59/195 on Human Rights and Terrorism, paragraph 1 of which refers to the territorial integrity of states; and resolution 53/243, the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace, paragraph 15 (h) of which calls on states to refrain from any form of coercion aimed against the political independence and territorial integrity of states.

coastal State if in the territorial sea it engages in any of the following activities: (a) any threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity or political independence of the coastal State”.²⁸

30. The norm of territorial integrity applies essentially to protect the international boundaries of independent states. However, it also applies to protect the temporary, if agreed, boundaries of such states from the use of force. The Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations 1970 provides that:

“Every state likewise has the duty to refrain from the threat or use of force to violate international lines of demarcation, such as armistice lines, established by or pursuant to an international agreement to which it is a party or which it is otherwise bound to respect. Nothing in the foregoing shall be construed as prejudicing the positions of the parties concerned with regard to the status and effects of such lines under their special regimes or as affecting their temporary character”.

31. While the norm calling for respect for territorial integrity applies to independent states, it is also worth pointing to the fact that the international community sought to preserve the particular territorial configuration of colonial territories as the movement to decolonisation gathered pace. Point 4 of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1960 specifically called for an end to armed action against dependent peoples and emphasised that the “integrity of their national territory shall be respected”.²⁹ The Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations 1970 further provided that:

“The territory of a colony or other Non-Self-Governing Territory has, under the Charter, a status separate and distinct from the territory of the State administering it; and such separate and distinct status under the Charter shall exist until the people of the colony or Non-Self-Governing Territory have exercised their right of self-determination in accordance with the Charter, and particularly its purposes and principles”.³⁰

32. The UN, while underlining the presumption of territorial integrity with regard to colonial territories in the move to independence,³¹ was equally clear with regard to the need for respect for the territorial integrity of independent countries that were administering such territories. Point 6 of the Colonial Declaration stated that:

²⁸ See also article 39 providing for a similar rule with regard to the transit passage of ships and aircraft.

²⁹ General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV).

³⁰ General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV).

³¹ See further, below, para. 79 and following.

“Any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations”, while point 7 of the same Declaration noted that:

“All States shall observe faithfully and strictly the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the present Declaration on the basis of equality, non-interference in the internal affairs of all States, and respect for the sovereign rights of all peoples and their territorial integrity”.

33. On the same topic, although perhaps more robustly, the 1970 Declaration ended the section on self-determination by stating that:

“Nothing in the foregoing paragraphs shall be construed as authorizing or encouraging any action which would dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign and independent states conducting themselves in compliance with the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples as described above and thus possessed of a government representing the whole people belonging to the territory without distinction as to race, creed or colour”.³²

34. It was then separately emphasised that:

“Every state shall refrain from any action aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of any other state or country”.

35. Accordingly, acceptance of the separate status of the colonial territory was accompanied by recognition of the norm of territorial integrity of the state or country in question.

36. This approach whereby the recognition of particular rights in international law of non-state persons is accompanied by a reaffirmation of the principle of territorial integrity finds recent expression in the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, adopted on 7 September 2007.³³ Article 46 of the Declaration provides that:

“Nothing in this Declaration may be interpreted as implying for any State, people, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act contrary to the Charter of the United Nations or construed as authorizing or encouraging any action which would dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign and independent States”.

³² See further, below, para. 142 and following.

³³ A/61/L.67.

d) The Norm of Territorial Integrity as Enshrined in International Instruments of a Regional Nature

37. Many of the core constitutional documents of the leading regional organisations refer specifically to territorial integrity and the following examples, geographically arranged, may be provided.

i) Europe

38. The Helsinki Final Act, adopted on 1 August 1975 by the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, included a Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations Between Participating States (termed the “Decalogue”). Several of these principles are of note. Principle I notes that participating states will “respect each other’s sovereign equality and individuality as well as all the rights inherent in and encompassed by its sovereignty, including in particular the right of every state to juridical equality, to territorial integrity and to freedom and political independence”. Principle II declares that participating states “will refrain in their mutual relations, as well as in their international relations in general, from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations and with the present Declaration”. Principle III declares that participating states “regard as inviolable all one another's frontiers as well as the frontiers of all states in Europe”, while Principle IV deals specifically with territorial integrity and states as follows:

“The participating states will respect the territorial integrity of each of the participating states. Accordingly, they will refrain from any action inconsistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations against the territorial integrity, political independence or the unity of any participating state, and in particular from any such action constituting a threat or use of force. The participating states will likewise refrain from making each other’s territory the object of military occupation or other direct or indirect measures of force in contravention of international law, or the object of acquisition by means of such measures or the threat of them. No such occupation or acquisition will be recognized as legal”.

39. The Document on Confidence-Building Measures, adopted as part of the Helsinki Final Act, affirmed that participating states were:

“Determined further to refrain in their mutual relations, as well as in their international relations in general, from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations and with the Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States as adopted in this Final Act”.

40. The Charter of Paris for a New Europe adopted by the renamed Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe in November 1990 reaffirmed that:

“In accordance with our obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and commitments under the Helsinki Final Act, we renew our pledge to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or from acting in any other manner inconsistent with the principles or purposes of those documents”.

41. The OSCE Code of Conduct on Politico-Military Aspects of Security approved at the Budapest Summit of 1994 affirmed the duty of non-assistance to states resorting to the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any other state.³⁴ This was followed by the Lisbon Declaration on a Common and Comprehensive Security Model for Europe for the Twenty-First Century, adopted on 3 December 1996, in which the Heads of State and Government committed themselves inter alia “not to support participating States that threaten or use force in violation of international law against the territorial integrity or political independence of any participating State” (point 6).³⁵ The Charter for European Security, adopted in November 1999,³⁶ declared that participating states would “consult promptly, in conformity with our OSCE responsibilities, with a participating state seeking assistance in realizing its right to individual or collective self-defence in the event that its sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence are threatened” (point 16), while the Agreement on Adaptation of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe, reached at the same OSCE Istanbul Summit in 1999 by participating states, recalled “their obligation to refrain in their mutual relations, as well as in their international relations in general, from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations”.

42. The Council of Europe has adopted two conventions of particular relevance. First, the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages, adopted on 5 November 1992, provides in the preamble that:

“the protection and promotion of regional or minority languages in the different countries and regions of Europe represent an important contribution to the building of a Europe based on the principles of democracy and cultural diversity within the framework of national sovereignty and territorial integrity”, while article 5 states that:

“Nothing in this Charter may be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or perform any action in contravention of the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations or other obligations under international law, including the principle of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of states”.

³⁴ See OSCE Handbook, 2007, p. 83, <http://www.osce.org/publications/sg/2007/10/22286_1002_en.pdf>.

³⁵ S/1/96.

³⁶ PCOEW389.

43. Secondly, the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities, adopted on 1 February 1995, provides that “the realisation of a tolerant and prosperous Europe does not depend solely on co-operation between states but also requires transfrontier co-operation between local and regional authorities without prejudice to the constitution and territorial integrity of each state” and called for:

“the effective protection of national minorities and of the rights and freedoms of persons belonging to those minorities, within the rule of law, respecting the territorial integrity and national sovereignty of states”.

44. Article 21 emphasises that:

“Nothing in the present framework Convention shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or perform any act contrary to the fundamental principles of international law and in particular of the sovereign equality, territorial integrity and political independence of States”.

ii) The Atlantic Area

45. The North Atlantic Treaty, adopted on 4 April 1949 and established NATO as a collective security organisation, provides in article 4 that “[t]he Parties will consult together whenever, in the opinion of any of them, the territorial integrity, political independence or security of any of the Parties is threatened”.

iii) The Commonwealth of Independent States

46. The Charter of the Commonwealth of Independent States, adopted at Minsk on 22 January 1993, notes as amongst its principles listed in article 3, the inviolability of state borders, the recognition of existing borders and the rejection of unlawful territorial annexations; together with the territorial integrity of states and the rejection of any actions directed towards breaking up alien territory. Article 12 provides that:

“In the event that a threat arises to the sovereignty, security or territorial integrity of one or several member states or to international peace and security, the member states shall without delay bring into action the mechanism for mutual consultations for the purpose of coordinating positions and for the adoption of measures in order to eliminate the threat which has arisen, including peacekeeping operations and the use, where necessary, of the Armed Forces in accordance with the procedure for exercising the right to individual or collective defence according to Article 51 of the UN Charter”.

47. The CIS Collective Security Treaty was initially signed on 15 May 1992³⁷ and came into force on 20 April 1994 following the addition of further signatories. This treaty declared in article 2 that in the event of a threat to the security, sovereignty or territorial integrity of one or more of the signatory states, a mechanism for joint consultations would be activated. The treaty was renewed in 1999 for a further five years by the original six signatories,³⁸ but was replaced on 7 October 2002 by the Charter of the Collective Security Organisation. This Charter sought to ensure the “security, sovereignty and territorial integrity” of states parties as noted in the preamble, while article 3 described the purposes of the organisation as being “to strengthen peace and international and regional security and stability and to ensure the collective defence of the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of the member States, in the attainment of which the member States shall give priority to political measures”.

³⁷ By Armenia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Russia, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan.

48. Further, the Charter of GUAM,³⁹ adopted on 23 May 2006, calls for cooperation in article II based on “the principles of respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity of the states, inviolability of their internationally-recognized borders and non-interference in their internal affairs and other universally recognized principles and norms of international law”.

iv) Arab States

49. Article 5 of the Pact of the League of Arab States, adopted on 22 March 1945,⁴⁰ provides that:

“The recourse to force for the settlement of disputes between two or more member States shall not be allowed. Should there arise among them a dispute that does not involve the independence of a State, its sovereignty or its territorial integrity, and should the two contending parties apply to the Council for the settlement of this dispute, the decision of the Council shall then be effective and obligatory”.

v) Latin America

50. Article 1 of the Charter of the Organisation of American States 1948⁴¹ provides that the American states parties to the Charter thereby establish an international organisation “to promote their solidarity, to strengthen their collaboration, and to defend their sovereignty, their territorial integrity, and their independence”.

51. The Framework Treaty on Democratic Security in Central America, adopted on 15 December 1995, notes in article 26 as amongst its regional security principles the following:

³⁸ With the addition of Georgia, but the exclusion of Uzbekistan, who joined in 2006. On 18 August 2008, Georgia notified its intention to withdraw from the CIS, <http://www.mfa.gov.ge/index.php?lang_id=ENG&sec_id=36&info_id=7526>.

³⁹ Consisting of Azerbaijan, Georgia, Moldova and Ukraine. The Charter transformed the GUAM Group established in 1997 as a consultative forum and then formalised in 2001 into the “Organisation for Democracy and Economic Development – GUAM”, to be known as GUAM, see preamble.

⁴⁰ <http://avalon.law.yale.edu/20th_century/arableag.asp>.

⁴¹ As amended in 1967, 1985, 1992 and 1993, see <<http://www.oas.org/juridico/English/charter.html>>.

“(c) Renunciation of the threat or the use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of any country in the region that is a signatory of this Treaty; ...

(h) Collective defence and solidarity in the event of armed attack by a country outside the region against the territorial integrity, sovereignty, and independence of a Central American country, in accordance with the constitutional provisions of the latter country and of the international treaties in force;

(i) The national unity and territorial integrity of the countries in the framework of Central American integration”.

52. Article 42 further provides that “[a]ny armed aggression, or threat of armed aggression, by a state outside the region against the territorial integrity, sovereignty or independence of a Central American state shall be considered an act of aggression against the other Central American states”.

vi) Africa

53. The Charter of the Organisation of African Unity 1963 declares in article II (1) (c) that among the purposes of the organisation are the defence of their “sovereignty, their territorial integrity and independence”, while article III lists the principles to which the members of the OAU adhere in fulfilling the stated purposes of the organisation. These include the sovereign equality of all member states; non-interference in the internal affairs of states and “respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of each state and for its inalienable right to independent existence”. The OAU was transformed into the African Union by the Constitutive Act of the African Union 2000. Article 3 includes, among the objectives of the Union, defence of the “sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of its members”, while article 4 provides that the Union is to function in accordance with a number of principles, including “sovereign equality and interdependence among member states of the Union” and “respect of borders existing on achievement of independence”.

54. The norm of territorial integrity also appears explicitly in the constitutional documents of sub-regional organisations. For example, the Heads of State and Government of the member states of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) reaffirmed in article II of the Protocol Relating to the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management, Resolution, Peace-keeping and Security, adopted on 10 December 1999, a series of “fundamental principles”, including “territorial integrity and political independence of Member States”, while the preamble to the Protocol on Politics, Defence and Security Cooperation, adopted by the Heads of State and Government of the member states of the Southern African Development Community on 14 August 2001, recognised and reaffirmed the principles of “strict respect for sovereignty, sovereign equality, territorial integrity, political independence, good neighbourliness, interdependence, non-aggression and non-interference in internal affairs of other States” and declared in article 11 (1) (a) that “State Parties shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, other than for the legitimate purpose of individual or collective self-defence against an armed attack”.

vii) Islamic States

55. The Charter of the Organisation of the Islamic Conference 1972 provides that amongst its principles laid down in article II are “respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of each member state” and “abstention from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity, national unity or political independence of any member states”. The Islamabad Declaration adopted at the Extraordinary Session of the Islamic Summit 1997 reaffirmed in its preamble respect for the principles of “sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-interference in internal affairs of states”.⁴² The Charter of the Organisation was replaced with an amended document dated 14 March 2008, which refers twice in its preambular paragraph to the determination of the organisation to “respect, safeguard and defend the national sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all member states”. Article 1 noted as one of the objectives of the organisation to respect the “sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of each Member State”, while another objective is to “support the restoration of complete sovereignty and territorial integrity of any member state under occupation, as a result of aggression, on the basis of international law and cooperation with the relevant international and regional organisations”. Article 2 states the principles of the organisation, including the principle that all member states “undertake to respect national sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of other member states and shall refrain from interfering in the internal affairs of others”.

viii) Asia

56. The Southeast Asia Collective Defence Treaty (the Manila Pact) was signed on 8 September 1954 by the US, UK and France with a number of southeast Asian states, creating the Southeast Asia Treaty Organisation. In article II, the parties agreed “separately and jointly, by means of continuous and effective self-help and mutual aid will maintain and develop their individual and collective capacity to resist armed attack and to prevent and counter subversive activities directed from without against their territorial integrity and political stability”. The organisation ended in 1977.

57. The Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN) was created on 8 August 1967. In the Treaty of Amity and Cooperation in Southeast Asia, 1976, the states parties agreed to be bound by a number of “fundamental principles” laid down in article 2, including “[m]utual respect for the independence, sovereignty, equality, territorial integrity and national identity of all nations”. Article 10 provides that “[e]ach High Contracting Party shall not in any manner or form participate in any activity which shall constitute a threat to the political and economic stability, sovereignty, or territorial integrity of another High Contracting Party”. The ASEAN Charter was signed on 20 November 2007, with the preamble noting respect for the “principles of sovereignty, equality, territorial integrity, non-interference, consensus and unity in diversity”.⁴³ Article 2 (2) provides that ASEAN and its member states are to act in accordance with a number of principles, including “respect for the independence, sovereignty, equality, territorial integrity and national identity of all ASEAN member states”.

⁴² A/51/915.

⁴³ The member states currently are Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Indonesia, Lao PDR, Malaysia, Myanmar, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand and Vietnam.

58. Further, the Charter of the South Asian Regional Association for Regional Cooperation,⁴⁴ adopted on 8 December 1986, affirmed “respect for the principles of sovereign equality, territorial integrity, national independence, non-use of force and non-interference in the internal affairs of other States and peaceful settlement of all disputes” and emphasised in article II (1) that “[c]ooperation within the framework of the Association shall be based on respect for the principles of sovereign equality, territorial integrity, political independence, non-interference in the internal affairs of other States and mutual benefit”.

e) The Norm of Territorial Integrity as Enshrined in Agreements Concerning Situations of a Specific Nature

59. The norm of territorial integrity has also been expressed in a number of bilateral or limited participation international agreements concerning the resolution of particular issues. A brief survey of some of the more significant examples will suffice.

60. In article 3 of the Japan–Korean Treaty of 23 February 1904, for instance, Japan guaranteed the territorial integrity of the Korean Empire, while the Treaty of Guarantee of 16 August 1960, part of the constitutional settlement of the Cyprus issue, provided both for the new Republic of Cyprus to “ensure the maintenance of its independence, territorial integrity and security” (article II) and for a guarantee of that territorial integrity by Greece, Turkey and the UK (article III). The Indo-Nepal Treaty of 31 July 1950 provided for mutual recognition of both state’s independence and territorial integrity, while the Simla Agreement between India and Pakistan, signed on 2 July 1972, provided in point (v) for “respect each other’s national unity, territorial integrity, political independence and sovereign equality”. The peace agreements between Israel and Egypt of 26 March 1979 (article II) and between Israel and Jordan of 26 October 1994 (article 2 (1)) both provided for recognition of each state’s territorial integrity, while the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Dayton Agreement), signed on 14 December 1995, provided that the parties (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia) agreed to “refrain from any action, by threat or use of force or otherwise, against the territorial integrity or political independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina or any other state”.⁴⁵

61. Further, a series of agreements between eastern European states after the end of the Cold War provided for the mutual recognition of borders.⁴⁶ For example, the Lithuania-Poland Agreement of 26 April 1994 “formally ratifying now and for the future the integrity of the current territories” (preamble) confirmed “the principles of respect for sovereignty, the inviolability of the borders, prohibition of armed aggression, territorial integrity, non interference in local affairs, and regard for human rights and basic freedoms” (article 1) and recognised the “inviolability of the existing border between them marked in the territory and mutually commit themselves to respect without any conditions the other’s sovereignty and territorial integrity” (article 2). In the Hungary-Romania Treaty, ⁴⁴ Consisting of India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, the Maldives, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Bhutan.

⁴⁵ This agreement was witnessed by France, the UK, the US, Germany and Russia. See also the Croatia-Bosnia Treaty on the State Border of 30 July 1999.

⁴⁶ See also the German-Polish Agreement on the Confirmation of the Frontier, 14 November 1990.

signed on 16 September 1996, the parties provided in article 4 that they, “according to the principles and norms of international law and with the principles of the Final Act in Helsinki, reconfirm that they shall observe the inviolability of their common border and the territorial integrity of the other Party”, while the Romania-Ukraine Treaty signed on 2 June 1997 underlined the principles of the inviolability of frontiers and of the territorial integrity of states (article 1 (2)) and reaffirmed that they “shall not have recourse, in any circumstances, to the threat of force or use of force, directed either against the territorial integrity or political independence of the other Contracting Party” (article 3).⁴⁷

62. Finally, in the China-Russia Treaty of 16 July 2001 the parties reaffirmed in article 1 a number of principles, including “mutual respect of state sovereignty and territorial integrity” and in article 4 specifically supported each other’s policies “on defending the national unity and territorial integrity” and promised not to undertake any action that “compromises the sovereignty, security and territorial integrity of the other contracting party” (article 8).

f) The Norm of Territorial Integrity as Enshrined in UN Resolutions of a Specific Nature

63. The norm of territorial integrity has also been referred to, and reaffirmed, in a large number of UN resolutions adopted with regard to particular situations. In particular, and covering recent years only, the territorial integrity of the following states has been explicitly and specifically reaffirmed: Kuwait,⁴⁸ Ukraine,⁴⁹ Iraq,⁵⁰ Afghanistan,⁵¹ Angola,⁵² East Timor,⁵³ Sierra Leone,⁵⁴ Burundi,⁵⁵ Lebanon,⁵⁶ Georgia,⁵⁷ Cyprus,⁵⁸ the Comoros,⁵⁹ the Democratic Republic of the Congo,⁶⁰ Rwanda

⁴⁷ See also article 13 (12) providing that none of the provisions of that article concerning national minorities could be interpreted as implying “any right to undertake any action or commit any activity contrary to the goals and principles of the Charter of the United Nations or to other obligations resulting from international law or to the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act and of the Paris Charter for a New Europe, including the principle of territorial integrity of states.”

⁴⁸ Security Council resolution 687 (1991).

⁴⁹ See Security Council Presidential statement of 20 July 1993, S/26118.

⁵⁰ Ibid and resolutions 1770 (2007), 1790 (2007) and 1830 (2008).

⁵¹ See Security Council resolutions 1267 (1999), 1776 (2007).

⁵² See Security Council resolution 1268 (1999). See also General Assembly resolution 52/211.

⁵³ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 389 (1976), 1272 (1999), and 1745 (2007).

⁵⁴ Security Council resolution 1306 (2000).

⁵⁵ Security Council resolution 1719 (2006).

⁵⁶ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 347 (1974), 425 (1978), 436 (1978), 444 (1979), 467 (1980), 490 (1981), 508 (1982), 509 (1982), 520 (1982), 542 (1983), 564 (1985), 587 (1986), 1052 (1996), 1559 (2004), 1655 (2006), 1701 (2006), 1757 (2007) and 1773 (2007). See also General Assembly resolution 36/226.

⁵⁷ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 1752 (2007), 1781 (2007) and 1808 (2008).

⁵⁸ See e.g. General Assembly resolutions 3212 (XXIX) and 37/253.

⁵⁹ See e.g. General Assembly resolution 37/43.

⁶⁰ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 1756 (2007), 1771 (2007), 1794 (2007), 1804 (2008) and 1807 (2008). See also General Assembly resolution 60/170.

and other states in the region,⁶¹ Burundi,⁶² Côte d'Ivoire,⁶³ Somalia,⁶⁴ Sudan,⁶⁵ Chad and the Central African Republic,⁶⁶ Haiti,⁶⁷ the states of the Former Yugoslavia,⁶⁸ and Nepal.⁶⁹

64. Finally, it should be specifically noted for the particular purposes of this Report that the Security Council has explicitly reaffirmed the territorial integrity of Azerbaijan and of all other states in the region in resolutions 822 (1993), 853 (1993), 874 (1993) and 884 (1993). Further, the General Assembly in resolution 62/243, adopted on 14 March 2008, expressly reaffirmed “continued respect and support for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Azerbaijan within its internationally recognized borders”.

g) Conclusion

65. It can, therefore, be seen at this stage that the norm of territorial integrity has been comprehensively confirmed and affirmed in a long series of international instruments, binding and non-binding, ranging from UN resolutions of a general and a specific character to international multilateral, regional and bilateral agreements. There can thus be no doubting the legal nature of this norm, nor its centrality in the international legal and political system. As the Supreme Court of Canada emphasised, “international law places great importance on the territorial integrity of nation states”.⁷⁰

II. Some Relevant Consequential Principles

66. The foundational norm of territorial integrity has generated a series of relevant consequential principles.

a) Prohibition of the Threat or Use of Force

67. The territorial integrity of states is protected by the international legal prohibition on threat or use of force. Article 2 (4) of the UN Charter lays down the rule that:

“All members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations”.

⁶¹ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 1771 (2007), 1804 (2008) and 1807 (2008).

⁶² See e.g. Security Council resolution 1791 (2007).

⁶³ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 1739 (2007), 1765 (2007), 1795 (2008) and 1826 (2008).

⁶⁴ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 1766 (2007), 1772 (2007), 1801 (2008), 1811 (2008) and 1816 (2008).

⁶⁵ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 1769 (2007), 1784 (2007), 1841 (2008) and 1828 (2008).

⁶⁶ See e.g. Security Council resolution 1778 (2007).

⁶⁷ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 1780 (2007) and 1840 (2008).

⁶⁸ See e.g. Security Council resolution 1785 (2007).

⁶⁹ See e.g. Security Council resolution 1796 (2008).

⁷⁰ Reference Re Secession of Quebec [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, para. 112.

68. This principle constitutes a norm of particular importance. Article 9 of the Draft Declaration on Rights and Duties of States 1949 declares that:

“Every state has the duty to refrain from resorting to war as an instrument of national policy, and to refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of another state, or in any other manner inconsistent with international law and order”.⁷¹

69. The Declaration on the Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation Among States in Accordance with the Charter of the UN, adopted by the General Assembly on 24 October 1970,⁷² recalls “the duty of states to refrain in their international relations from military, political, economic or any other form of coercion aimed against the political independence or territorial integrity of any State” and emphasises that it was “essential that all States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations”. The preamble continues by underlining that “any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a state or country or at its political independence is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter”.

70. Beyond these preambular comments, the Declaration interpreted specifically a number of principles, contained in the UN Charter, including the principle prohibiting inter alia the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity of states. The Declaration provides that:

“Every State has the duty to refrain in its international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations. Such a threat or use of force constitutes a violation of international law and the Charter of the United Nations and shall never be employed as a means of settling international issues... Every State has the duty to refrain from the threat or use of force to violate the existing international boundaries of another State or as a means of solving international disputes, including territorial disputes and problems concerning frontiers of States”.

71. It is accepted that the unlawful use of force is not only a rule contained in the UN Charter and in customary international law, but that it is also contrary to the rules of jus cogens, or a higher or peremptory norm. The International Law Commission in its commentary on the Draft Articles on the Law of Treaties noted that “the law of the Charter concerning the prohibition of the use of force in itself constitutes a conspicuous example of a rule in international law having the character of jus cogens” and included as an example of a treaty which would violate the rules of jus cogens and thus be invalid, a treaty contemplating an unlawful use of force contrary to the principles of the Charter,⁷³

⁷¹ General Assembly resolution 375 (IV).

⁷² General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV).

⁷³ Yearbook of the International Law Commission, 1966, vol. II, pp. 247-8.

while the Commission in its commentary on article 40 of the Draft Articles concerning State Responsibility noted that “it is generally agreed that the prohibition of aggression is to be regarded as peremptory”.⁷⁴ Support for this proposition included not only the Commission’s commentary on what became article 53 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 1969,⁷⁵ but also uncontradicted statements by Governments in the course of the Vienna Conference on the Law of Treaties⁷⁶ and the view of the International Court in the Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua case.⁷⁷

72. Linked to this rule of jus cogens, is the associated principle that boundaries cannot in law be changed by the use of force. Security Council resolution 242 (1967), for example, emphasised the “inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war”, while the Declaration on Principles of International Law 1970 declared that:

“The territory of a state shall not be the object of acquisition by another state resulting from the threat or use of force. No territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force shall be recognised as legal”.

73. Principle IV of the Declaration of Principles adopted by the CSCE in the Helsinki Final Act 1975 noted that:

“The participating states will likewise refrain from making each other's territory the object of military occupation or other direct or indirect measures of force in contravention of international law, or the object of acquisition by means of such measures or the threat of them. No such occupation or acquisition will be recognized as legal”, while Security Council resolution 662 (1990), adopted unanimously and under Chapter VII as a binding decision, declared that the purported Iraqi annexation of Kuwait “under any form and whatever pretext has no legal validity and is considered null and void”.

⁷⁴ J.Crawford, The International Law Commission’s Articles on State Responsibility, Cambridge, 2002, p. 246.

⁷⁵ See footnote 72 above.

⁷⁶ The Commission noted in a footnote to this comments that “[i]n the course of the conference, a number of Governments characterized as peremptory the prohibitions against aggression and the illegal use of force: see Official Records of the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, First Session, Vienna, 26 March to 24 May 1968, summary records of the plenary meeting and of the meetings of the Committee of the Whole (United Nations publication, Sales No. E.68.V.7), 52nd meeting, paras. 3, 31 and 43; 53rd meeting, paras. 4, 9, 15, 16, 35, 48, 59 and 69; 54th meeting, paras. 9, 41, 46 and 55; 55th meeting, paras. 31 and 42; and 56th meeting, paras. 6, 20, 29 and 51”, see J.Crawford, The International Law Commission’s Articles on State Responsibility, Cambridge, 2002, p. 246.

⁷⁷ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 100-101. This view is supported by scholars, see e.g. B.Simma, “NATO, the UN and the Use of Force: Legal Aspects”, 10 European Journal of International Law, 1999, pp. 1, 3.

74. The International Court in the Construction of a Wall advisory opinion⁷⁸ emphasised that just as the principles as to the use of force incorporated in the Charter reflected customary international law, “the same is true of its corollary entailing the illegality of territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force”.

b) The Objectivisation of Boundary Treaties

75. One further aspect of the importance of the territorial definition of states and the special protection afforded to it by international law is with regard to boundary treaties. Treaties as a matter of general principle bind only those states that are parties to them and the rights conferred by them will normally subside with the termination of the treaty itself. However, and due to the special position of boundaries in international law, treaties that concern boundaries between states manifest an unusual character in this respect.

76. Boundary treaties create an objective reality. That is, the boundaries established in such treaties will apply erga omnes and will survive the demise of the treaty itself. This proposition was reaffirmed by the International Court in the Libya/Chad case. The Court noted that:

“the establishment of this boundary is a fact which, from the outset, has had a legal life of its own, independently of the fate of the 1955 Treaty. Once agreed the boundary stands, for any other approach would vitiate the fundamental principle of the stability of boundaries, the importance of which has been repeatedly emphasised by the Court (Temple of Preah Vihear, ICJ Reports, 1962, p. 34; Aegean Sea Continental Shelf, ICJ Reports, 1978, p. 36).

A boundary established by treaty thus achieves a permanence which the treaty itself does not necessarily enjoy. The treaty can cease to be in force without in any way affecting the continuance of the boundary... This is not to say that two states may not by mutual agreement vary the border between them; such a result can of course be achieved by mutual consent, but when a boundary has been the subject of agreement, the continued existence of that boundary is not dependent upon the continued life of the treaty under which the boundary is agreed”.⁷⁹

77. This position is supported, or reflected, by two further principles. The first relates to the rebus sic stantibus rule. This provides that a party to a treaty may unilaterally invoke as a ground for terminating or suspending the operation of the treaty the fact that there has been a fundamental change of circumstances from those which existed at the time of the conclusion of the treaty.⁸⁰ The doctrine was enshrined in article 62 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 1969, which was accepted by the International Court in the jurisdictional phase of the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases as a ⁷⁸ ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 171. See also General Assembly resolution ES-10/14, 8 December 2003.

⁷⁹ ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 37.

⁸⁰ See, for example, A.D.McNair, The Law of Treaties (1961), pp. 681-91 and T.O. Elias, The Modern Law of Treaties (1974), p. 119.

codification of existing customary international law. The issue focused on whether there had been a radical transformation in the extent of obligations imposed by the treaty in question.⁸¹ However, article 62 (2) (a) of the Vienna Convention provides that the doctrine could not be invoked “if the treaty establishes a boundary” and it is clear from the International Law Commission’s Commentary that such treaties should constitute an exception to the general rule permitting termination or suspension, since otherwise the rule might become a source of dangerous frictions.⁸²

78. The second principle relates to state succession. Article 16 of the Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties 1978 provides the basic rule that a newly independent state (in the sense of a former colonial territory) was not bound to maintain in force or to become a party to any treaty by reason only of the fact that at the date of the succession of states the treaty was in force in respect of the territory to which the succession of states relates. However, this adoption of the so-called “clean slate” principle was held not to apply to boundary treaties. Article 11 of the Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties 1978 provides that “a succession of States does not as such affect: (a) a boundary established by a treaty...”. The wording used is instructive. The reference, of course, is to a boundary established by a treaty and not to the treaty itself as such and it is important to differentiate between the instrument and the objective reality it creates or recognises. In this sense, the treaty is constitutive.

79. Article 11 has subsequently been affirmed as requiring respect for treaty based boundary settlements. The International Court of Justice in the Tunisia/Libya case expressly stated that “this rule of continuity ipso jure of boundary and territorial treaties was later embodied in the 1978 Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties”,⁸³ while the Arbitration Commission established by the International Conference on Yugoslavia stated in Opinion No. 3 that “all external frontiers must be respected in line with the principle stated in the United Nations Charter, in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations (General Assembly Resolution 2625 (XXV)) and in the Helsinki Final Act, a principle which also underlies Article 11 of the Vienna Convention of 23 August 1978 on the Succession of States in Respect of Treaties”.⁸⁴

⁸¹ ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 3, 18.

⁸² Yearbook of the International Law Commission (1966 II), p. 259.

⁸³ ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 66. See also the Burkina Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 563 and Judge Ajibola’s Separate Opinion in the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 64.

⁸⁴ 92 International Law Reports, pp. 170, 171.

c) The Principle of *Uti Possidetis Juris*⁸⁵

80. The principle of uti possidetis is a critical doctrine which underpins the process of coming to statehood of a new entity under international law. Essentially it provides that new states achieve independence with the same borders that they had when they were administrative units within the territory or territories of either a colonial power or an already independent state. The fundamental aim of the doctrine is to underline the principle of the stability of state boundaries, but it also provides the new state with a territorial legitimation. This legitimation may derive from boundaries that were originally international boundaries or boundaries that were originally internal lines. In the former case, the rule of state succession to boundaries established by treaties will, of course, apply. However, the rule of continuity of international boundaries constitutes a general principle and will also apply however that boundary was established, for example, by way of recognition or by way of an international award. As the Court made clear in the Burkina Faso/Mali case,⁸⁶ “there is no doubt that the obligation to respect pre-existing international boundaries in the event of a state succession derives from a general rule of international law”.

81. Essentially, the principle of uti possidetis functions in the context of the transmission of sovereignty and the creation of a new independent state and conditions that process. Once the new state has become independent, the norm of territorial integrity takes over to provide protection for the territorial framework of that state.

82. The principle of uti possidetis first appeared in modern times in Latin America as the successor states to the Spanish Empire obtained their independence. The primary intention was clearly to seek to prevent the return of European colonialism by an acceptance that no areas of terra nullius remained on the continent since successor states succeeded to the boundaries of the former Spanish colonies or administrative units.⁸⁷ From Latin America the doctrine moved across to Africa, where the situation was rather more intricate both because of the involvement of a number of European colonial powers and because of the complex ethnic patterns of the continent.

83. Resolution 16(1) adopted by the Organisation of African Unity at its Cairo meeting in 1964 entrenched, or more correctly, reaffirmed the core principle. This stated that colonial frontiers existing at the moment of decolonization constituted a tangible reality which all member states pledged themselves to respect. This resolution was a key political statement and one with crucial legal

⁸⁵ See e.g. M.Kohen, Possession Contestée et Souveraineté Territoriale, Geneva, 1997, chapter 6, and ibid., “Uti Possidetis, Prescription et Pratique Subséquent à un Traité dans l’Affaire de l’Ile de Kasikili/Sedudu devant la Cour Internationale de Justice”, 43 German YIL, 2000, p. 253; G.Nesi, L’Uti Possidetis Iuris nel Diritto Internazionale, Padua, 1996; Luis Sánchez Rodríguez, “L’Uti Possidetis et les Effectivités dans les Contentieux Territoriaux et Frontaliers”, 263 Hague Recueil, 1997, p. 149; J.M.Sorel and R.Mehdi, “L’Uti Possidetis Entre la Consécration Juridique et la Pratique: Essai de Réactualisation”, AFDI, 1994, p. 11; T.Bartoš, “Uti Possidetis. Quo Vadis?”, 18 Australian YIL, 1997, p. 37; “L’Applicabilité de l’Uti Possidetis Juris dans les Situations de Sécession ou de Dissolution d’États”, Colloque, RBDI, 1998, p. 5, and M.N.Shaw, “Heritage of States”, loc.cit.

⁸⁶ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 566. See also the Tunisia/Libya case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 65-6.

⁸⁷ See Colombia-Venezuela, 1 Reports of International Arbitral Awards, pp. 223, 228 and El Salvador/Honduras (Nicaragua Intervening), ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 387.

overtone. It was carefully analysed by the International Court in the Burkina Faso/Mali case as an element in a wider situation.⁸⁸

84. The Court declared that the 1964 resolution “deliberately defined and stressed the principle of uti possidetis juris”, rather than establishing it. The resolution emphasized that the fact that the new African states had agreed to respect the administrative boundaries and frontiers established by the colonial powers “must be seen not as a mere practice contributing to the gradual emergence of a principle of customary international law, limited in its impact to the African continent as it had previously been to Spanish America, but as the application in Africa of a rule of general scope”. The acceptance of the colonial borders by African political leaders and by the OAU itself neither created a new rule nor extended to Africa a rule previously applied only in another continent. Rather it constituted the recognition and confirmation of an existing principle. As the Chamber noted, the essence of the principle of uti possidetis “lies in its primary aim of securing respect for the territorial boundaries at the moment when independence is achieved. Such territorial boundaries might be no more than delimitations between different administrative divisions or colonies all subject to the same sovereign. In that case the application of the principle of uti possidetis resulted in administrative boundaries being transformed into international frontiers in the full sense of the term”.⁸⁹

85. This definition was reaffirmed in the El Salvador/Honduras case and referred to as an authoritative statement.⁹⁰ The Court declared that uti possidetis was essentially “a retrospective principle, investing as international boundaries administrative limits intended originally for quite other purposes”.⁹¹ It was underlined in the Burkina Faso/Mali case⁹² that “the principle of uti possidetis freezes the territorial title; it stops the clock but does not put back the hands”.

86. It is also clear that the principle of uti possidetis applies beyond the decolonisation context to cover the situation of secession from, or dissolution of, an already independent state. The Court in the Burkina Faso/Mali case⁹³ took pains to emphasise that the principle was not “a special rule which pertains solely to one specific system of international law”, but rather:

“it is a general principle, which is logically connected with the phenomenon of the obtaining of independence, wherever it occurs. Its obvious purpose is to prevent the independence and stability of new states being endangered by fratricidal struggles provoked by the challenging of frontiers following the withdrawal of the administering power”.⁹⁴

⁸⁸ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 565-6.

⁸⁹ Ibid, at 566.

⁹⁰ ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 386.

⁹¹ Ibid, at 388.

⁹² ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 568.

⁹³ Ibid, at 565.

⁹⁴ Ibid. See also the Separate Opinion of Judge Kooijmans, Qatar v Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 230-2.

87. This formulation was repeated and affirmed in the decision of the International Court recently in Nicaragua v Honduras.⁹⁵

88. That uti possidetis is a general principle appears also from later practice. This may be seen, for example, with regard to the former USSR,⁹⁶ Czechoslovakia⁹⁷ and the former Yugoslavia. In the latter case, the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission established by the European Community and accepted by the states of the former Yugoslavia made several relevant comments. In Opinion No. 2, the Arbitration Commission declared that:

“whatever the circumstances, the right to self-determination must not involve changes to existing frontiers at the time of independence (uti possidetis juris) except where the states concerned agree otherwise”.⁹⁸

89. In Opinion No. 3, the Arbitration Commission, in considering the internal boundaries between Serbia and Croatia and Serbia and Bosnia-Herzegovina, emphasised that:

“except where otherwise agreed, the former boundaries became frontiers protected by international law. This conclusion follows from the principle of respect for the territorial status quo and in particular from the principle of uti possidetis. Uti possidetis, though initially applied in settling decolonization issues in America and Africa, is today recognised as a general principle, as stated by the International Court of Justice in its Judgment of 22 December 1986 in the case between Burkina Faso and Mali (Frontier Dispute)”.⁹⁹

90. This approach was confirmed, for example, by the Under-Secretary of State of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of the UK, who stated in a Note in January 1992¹⁰⁰ that:

“the borders of Croatia will become the frontiers of independent Croatia, so there is no doubt about that particular issue. That has been agreed amongst the Twelve, that will be our attitude towards those borders. They will just be changed from being republican borders to international frontiers”.

91. Article X of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina 1995 (the Dayton Peace Agreement) provided that “the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the Republic of ⁹⁵ ICJ Reports, 2007, paras. 151 and following.

⁹⁶ See e.g. R. Yakemtchouk, “Les Conflits de Territoires and de Frontières dans les Etats de l’Ex-URSS”, AFDI, 1993, p. 401. See further below, paragraphs 92-94 and following.

⁹⁷ See J. Malenovsky, “Problèmes Juridiques Liés à la Partition de la Tchecoslovaquie”, AFDI, 1993, p. 328.

⁹⁸ 92 ILR, p. 168. See also A. Pellet, “Note sur la Commission d’Arbitrage de la Conférence Européenne pour la Paix en Yugoslavie”, AFDI, 1991, p. 329, and Pellet, “Activité de la Commission d’Arbitrage de la Conférence Européenne pour la Paix en Yugoslavie”, AFDI, 1992, p. 220.

⁹⁹ 92 ILR, p. 171.

¹⁰⁰ UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 719.

Bosnia and Herzegovina recognise each other as sovereign independent states within their international borders”, while Security Council resolution 1038 (1996) reaffirmed the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Croatia.

92. Further relevant state practice may be noted. For example with regard to the former USSR, article 5 of the Agreement Establishing the Commonwealth of Independent States, signed at Minsk on 8 December 1991,¹⁰¹ provided that “the High Contracting Parties acknowledge and respect each other's territorial integrity and the inviolability of existing borders within the Commonwealth”. This was reinforced by the Alma Ata Declaration of 21 December 1991, signed by eleven of the former Republics (i.e., excluding the Baltic States and Georgia),¹⁰² which referred to the states “recognising and respecting each other’s territorial integrity and the inviolability of existing borders”. Although these instruments refer essentially to the principle of territorial integrity protecting international boundaries, it is clear that the intention was to assert and reinforce a uti possidetis doctrine, not least in order to provide international, regional and national legitimation for the new borders. This is so since the borders to be protected that had just come into being as international borders were those of the former Republics of the USSR and no other.

93. In addition, article 6 of the Ukraine-Russian Federation Treaty of 19 November 1990 provided specifically that both parties recognized and respected the territorial integrity of the former Russian and Ukrainian Republics of the USSR within the borders existing in the framework of the USSR. Similarly, the Treaty on the General Delimitation of the Common State Frontiers of 29 October 1992 between the Czech Republic and Slovakia confirmed that the boundary between the two new states as of their independence on 1 January 1993 would be the administrative border existing between the Czech and Slovak parts of the former state.¹⁰³

94. Of particular interest are the European Guidelines on Recognition of New States in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, adopted by the European Community and its Member States on 16 December 1991. These provided for a common policy on recognition with regard to the states emerging from the former Yugoslavia and former USSR in particular, which required inter alia “respect for the inviolability of all frontiers which can only be changed by peaceful means and by common agreement”.¹⁰⁴ This reference was thus not restricted to international frontiers and since the context was the coming to independence of a range of new states out of former federal states, all of whom became sovereign within the boundaries of the former federal units, the Guidelines constitute valuable affirmation of the principle of uti possidetis.

95. International practice, therefore, supports the conclusion that there is at the least a very strong presumption that a colony or federal or other distinct administrative unit will come to independence within the borders that it had in the period immediately prior to independence. The parties themselves

¹⁰¹ See 31 ILM, 1992, p. 138 and p. 147 and following, and 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1298.

¹⁰² 31 ILM, 1992, p. 148.

¹⁰³ See Malenovsky, “Problèmes”, loc.cit.

¹⁰⁴ 92 ILR, p. 174 (emphasis added).

may agree to alter the uti possidetis line, both during the process of acquisition of independence and afterwards, but this is dependent both upon the consent of the parties (and not just one of them) and the acceptance of this by the UN.¹⁰⁵

96. Apart from this, decolonisation practice shows essentially that only where there has been international legitimation by the United Nations may the operation of the principle be altered, and this would be dependent upon an internationally accepted threat to peace and security. The examples of Palestine¹⁰⁶ and Ruanda-Urundi¹⁰⁷ are instructive here in showing that the UN was convinced that for reasons of peace and security the territory in question should come to independence in a partitioned form and the UN proceeded to affirm this formally. However, these cases involved territories under UN supervision (as mandated or trust territories respectively) and it is difficult to think of an example of a non-consensual alteration of the uti possidetis line outside of this context and with regard to secession from, or dissolution of, an already independent state.

B. The Principle of Self-Determination¹⁰⁸

I. Self-Determination as a Legal Right

97. Self-determination has proved to be one of the key principles of modern international law, but, unlike, for example, the philosophical or political expression of the principle, the right to self-determination under international law has come to have a rather specific meaning, or more correctly two specific meanings.

98. The principle of self-determination essentially emerged through the concepts of nationality and democracy in nineteenth century Europe and very gradually extended its scope, owing much to the efforts of President Wilson of the US. Although there was no reference to the principle as such in the League of Nations Covenant and it was clearly not accepted as a legal right,¹⁰⁹ its influence can be detected in the various provisions for minority protection¹¹⁰ and in the establishment of the mandates ¹⁰⁵ Shaw, "Heritage", loc.cit., p. 141 and General Assembly resolution 1608 (XV). See also the Beagle Channel case, HMSO, 1977, pp. 4-5 and El Salvador/Honduras, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 408.

¹⁰⁶ See General Assembly resolution 181 (II) and Shaw, "Heritage", loc.cit., p. 148.

¹⁰⁷ Ibid. See also T/1551; T/1538; T/L.985 and Add.1; T/L.1004 and T/L.1005; A/5126 and Add.1 and General Assembly resolution 1746 (XVI).

¹⁰⁸ See, in general, e.g. A.Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 1995; K.Knop, Diversity and Self-Determination in International Law, Cambridge, 2002; A.E.Buchanan, Justice, Legitimacy and Self-Determination, Oxford, 2004; D.Raic, Statehood and the Law of Self-Determination, The Hague, 2002; Crawford, Creation of States in International Law, Oxford, 2nd ed., 2006, pp. 107 ff, and Crawford, "The General Assembly, the International Court and Self-Determination" in Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice (eds. A.V.Lowe and M.Fitzmaurice), Cambridge, 1996, p. 585; C.Tomuschat (ed.), Modern Law of Self-Determination, The Hague, 1993 and Shaw, International Law, op.cit., p. 251 and following.

¹⁰⁹ See e.g. A.Cobban, The Nation-State and National Self-Determination, London, 1969, and D.H.Miller, The Drafting of the Covenant, New York, 1928, vol. II, pp. 12-13.

¹¹⁰ See e.g. I.Claude, National Minorities, Cambridge, 1955, and J.Lador-Lederer, International Group Protection, Leiden, 1968.

system based as it was upon the sacred trust concept.¹¹¹ In the Aaland Islands case it was clearly accepted by both the International Commission of Jurists and the Committee of Rapporteurs that the principle of self-determination was not a legal rule of international law, but purely a political concept.¹¹²

99. Self-determination does, however, appear in the UN Charter. Article 1(2) stated that the development of friendly relations among nations, based upon respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination, constituted one of the purposes of the UN. This phraseology is repeated in article 55. Although clearly not expressed as a legal right, the inclusion of a reference to self-determination in the Charter, particularly within the context of the statement of purposes of the UN, provided the opportunity for the subsequent interpretation of the principle. It is also to be noted that Chapters XI and XII of the Charter deal with non-self-governing and trust territories and may be seen as relevant within the context of the development and definition of the right to self-determination, although the term is not expressly used.

100. Practice since 1945 within the UN, both generally and particularly with regard to specific cases, can be seen as having ultimately established the legal standing of the right in international law. Resolution 1514 (XV), the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, adopted in 1960 by eighty-nine votes to none, with nine abstentions, for example, stressed that:

“all peoples have the right to self-determination; by virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development”.

101. It continued by noting that inadequacy of political, social, economic or educational preparedness was not to serve as a justification for delaying independence, while attempts aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a country were deemed incompatible with the UN Charter. The Colonial Declaration set the terms for the self-determination debate in its emphasis upon the colonial context and its opposition to secession, and has been regarded by some as constituting a binding interpretation of the Charter.¹¹³ The International Court has specifically referred to the Colonial Declaration as an “important stage” in the development of international law regarding non-self-governing territories and as the “basis for the process of decolonization”.¹¹⁴

¹¹¹ See e.g. H.D.Hall, Mandates, Dependencies and Trusteeships, Washington, 1948 and Q.Wright, Mandates under the League of Nations, Chicago, 1930.

¹¹² LNOJ Supp. No. 3, 1920, pp. 5–6 and Doc. B7/21/68/106[VII], pp. 22–3. See also J.Barros, The Aaland Islands Question, New Haven, 1968.

¹¹³ See e.g. O.Asamoah, The Legal Significance of the Declarations of the General Assembly of the United Nations, The Hague, 1966, pp. 177–85.

¹¹⁴ The Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 31. Tomuschat has called the Colonial Declaration “the starting point for the rise of self-determination as a principle generating true legal rights”, see “Secession and Self-Determination” in M.G.Kohen (ed.), Secession, op.cit., p. 23

102. The 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations, which can be regarded as constituting an authoritative interpretation of the seven Charter provisions it expounds, states inter alia that:

“by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all people have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and every state has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter”.

103. In addition to this general, abstract approach, the UN organs have dealt with self-determination in a series of specific resolutions with regard to particular situations and this practice may be adduced as reinforcing the conclusions that the principle has become a right in international law by virtue of a process of Charter interpretation. Numerous resolutions have been adopted in the General Assembly and also the Security Council.¹¹⁵ It is also possible that a rule of customary law has been created since practice in the UN system is still state practice, but the identification of the opinio juris element is not easy and will depend upon careful assessment and judgment.

104. In 1966, the General Assembly adopted the International Covenants on Human Rights. Both these Covenants have an identical first article, declaring inter alia that:

“All peoples have the right to self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development”, while states parties to the instruments:

“shall promote the realisation of the right of self-determination and shall respect that right in conformity with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations”.

105. The Covenants came into force in 1976 and thus constitute binding provisions as between the parties. The Human Rights Committee, established under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (and with its jurisdiction extended under the first Optional Protocol), has discussed the nature of self-determination and this will be noted below (see para. 118-119).

106. Judicial discussion of the principle of self-determination has been relatively rare and rather broad. In the Namibia advisory opinion¹¹⁶ the International Court emphasised that “the subsequent development of international law in regard to non-self-governing territories as enshrined in the ¹¹⁵ See e.g. Assembly resolutions 1755 (XVII); 2138 (XXI); 2151 (XXI); 2379 (XXIII); 2383 (XXIII) and Security Council resolutions 183 (1963); 301 (1971); 377 (1975) and 384 (1975).

¹¹⁶ ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 31.

Charter of the United Nations made the principle of self-determination applicable to all of them”. The Western Sahara advisory opinion reaffirmed this point.¹¹⁷

107. The Court moved one step further in the East Timor (Portugal v. Australia) case¹¹⁸ when it declared that “Portugal’s assertion that the right of peoples to self-determination, as it evolved from the Charter and from United Nations practice, has an erga omnes character, is irreproachable.” The Court also emphasised that the right of peoples to self-determination was “one of the essential principles of contemporary international law”.

108. In the Construction of a Wall advisory opinion,¹¹⁹ the Court summarised the position as follows:

“The Court would recall that in 1971 it emphasized that current developments in ‘international law in regard to non-self-governing territories, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, made the principle of self-determination applicable to all [such territories]’. The Court went on to state that ‘These: developments leave little doubt that the ultimate objective of the sacred trust’ referred to in Article 22, paragraph 1, of the Covenant of the League of Nations ‘was the self-determination... of the peoples concerned’ (Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970), Advisory Opinion, I. C. J. Reports 1971, p. 31, paras. 52-53). The Court has referred to this principle on a number of occasions in its jurisprudence (ibid.; see also Western Sahara, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. reports, 1975, p. 68, para. 162). The Court indeed made it clear that the right of peoples to self-determination is today a right erga omnes (see East Timor (Portugul v. Australia), Judgment, I. C. J. Reports 1995, p. 102, para. 29)”.

109. Confirmation of the status of the principle of self-determination was provided by the Supreme Court of Canada in 1998 in the Reference re Secession of Quebec case.¹²⁰ The Court responded to the second of the three questions posed, asking whether there existed in international law a right to self-determination which would give Quebec the right unilaterally to secede, by declaring that the principle of self-determination “has acquired a status beyond ‘convention’ and is considered a general principle of international law”.¹²¹

110. Since it is undeniable that the principle of self-determination has a legal norm, the question arises as to its scope and application. Although the usual formulation contained in international ¹¹⁷ ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 31.

¹¹⁸ ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 102.

¹¹⁹ ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 172. See also ibid, p. 199.

¹²⁰ [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217. The first question concerned the existence or not in Canadian constitutional law of a right to secede, and the third question asked whether in the event of a conflict constitutional or international law would have priority.

¹²¹ Ibid, para. 115.

instruments¹²² from the 1960 Colonial Declaration to the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law and the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights refers to the right of “all peoples” to determine “freely their political status”, international practice is clear that not all “peoples” as defined in a political–sociological sense¹²³ are accepted in international law as able to freely determine their political status up to and including secession from a recognised independent state. In fact, practice shows that the right has been recognised for “peoples” in strictly defined circumstances.

II. The Nature and Scope of the Right to Self-Determination

111. The following propositions, based on international practice and doctrine, may be put forward.

a) Self-Determination Applies to Mandate and Trusteeship Territories

112. The right to self-determination was first recognised as applying to mandate and trust territories, that is, the colonies of the defeated powers of the two world wars. Such territories were to be governed according to the principle that “the well-being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilisation”. This entrusted the tutelage of such peoples to “advanced nations who by reason of their resources, their experience or their geographical position” could undertake the responsibility. The arrangement was exercised by them as mandatories on behalf of the League.¹²⁴ Upon the conclusion of the Second World War and the demise of the League, the mandate system was transmuted into the United Nations trusteeship system under Chapters XII and XIII of the UN Charter.¹²⁵

b) Self-Determination Applies to Non-Self-Governing Territories under the UN Charter

113. The right of self-determination was subsequently recognised as applicable to all non-self-governing territories as enshrined in the UN Charter. An important step in this process was the Colonial Declaration 1960, which called for the right to self-determination with regard to all colonial countries and peoples that had not attained independence and this was confirmed by the International Court of Justice in two advisory opinions.¹²⁶ The UN based its policy on the proposition that “the ¹²² See also article 20 of the African Charter of Human and Peoples’ Rights 1981, which provides that, “all peoples shall have the right to existence. They shall have the unquestionable and inalienable right to self-determination. They shall freely determine their political status and shall pursue their economic and social development according to the policy they have chosen”.

¹²³ See e.g. Cobban, Nation-State, p. 107, and K.Deutsche, Nationalism and Social Communications, New York, 1952. See also the Greco-Bulgarian Communities case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 17; 5 AD, p. 4.

¹²⁴ See article 22 of the Covenant of the League of Nations. See also the International Status of South West Africa, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 128, 132; the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 28–9; Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 240, 256; and Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 409.

¹²⁵ See e.g. Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 240, 257 and Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 409.

¹²⁶ See the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 31 and the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 31-3. See also the Construction of a Wall case, ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 172.

territory of a colony or other non-self-governing territory has under the Charter a status separate and distinct from the territory of the state administering it” and that such status was to exist until the people of that territory had exercised the right to self-determination.¹²⁷ The Canadian Supreme Court concluded in the Quebec Secession case that “[t]he right of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination by breaking away from the “imperial” power is now undisputed”.¹²⁸

114. The principle of self-determination provides that the people of the colonially defined territorial unit in question may freely determine their own political status. Such determination may result in independence, integration with a neighbouring state, free association with an independent state or any other political status freely decided upon by the people concerned.¹²⁹

c) Self-Determination Applies to Territories under Foreign or Alien Occupation

115. The Declaration on Principles of International Law 1970 noted that the “subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a violation of the principle [of self-determination], as well as a denial of fundamental human rights, and is contrary to the Charter”, while article 1 (4) of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions 1949, adopted in 1977, referred to “armed conflicts in which peoples are fighting against colonial domination and alien occupation and against racist regimes in the exercise of their right of self-determination, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations”. The Canadian Supreme Court also referred to the right of self-determination in the context of foreign military occupations.¹³⁰

116. The Palestine people under Israeli occupation since the 1967 war has, in particular, been recognised as having the right to self-determination. This was noted in a number of UN resolutions¹³¹ and by the International Court in the Construction of a Wall case.¹³² Further example of this might include, amongst others, Afghanistan under Soviet occupation.¹³³

¹²⁷ 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law. Note also that resolution 1541 (XV) declared that there is an obligation to transmit information regarding a territory “which is geographically separate and is distinct ethnically and/or culturally from the country administering it”.

¹²⁸ [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, para. 132.

¹²⁹ Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 33 and 68. See also Judge Dillard, ibid., p. 122; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 50, 85, 138. See General Assembly resolution 1541 (XV) and the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law.

¹³⁰ The Quebec Secession case, [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, para. 138.

¹³¹ See e.g. General Assembly resolutions 3236 (XXIX), 55/85 and 58/163. See also General Assembly resolutions 38/16 and 41/100 and Cassese, Self-Determination, op.cit., p. 92 and following.

¹³² ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 183, 197 and 199. See also e.g. Cassese, Self-Determination, op.cit., pp. 90–9.

¹³³ See e.g. Cassese, Self-Determination, op.cit., p. 94 and following.

d) Self-Determination Applies Within States as a Rule of Human Rights

117. Cassese has written that:¹³⁴

“Internal self-determination means the right to authentic self-government, that is, the right for a people really and freely to choose its own political and economic regime – which is much more than choosing among what is on offer perhaps from one political or economic position only. It is an ongoing right. Unlike external self-determination for colonial peoples – which ceases to exist under customary international law once it is implemented – the right to internal self-determination is neither destroyed nor diminished by its already once having been invoked and put into effect”.

118. This aspect of self-determination applies in a number of contexts, but with the common theme of the recognition of legal rights for communities of persons within the recognised territorial framework of the independent state.

i) Generally

119. The interpretation of self-determination as a principle of collective human rights has been analysed by the Human Rights Committee in interpreting article 1 of the Civil and Political Rights Covenant.¹³⁵ In its General Comment on Self-Determination adopted in 1984, the Committee emphasised that the realisation of the right was “an essential condition for the effective guarantee and observance of individual human rights”.¹³⁶ The Committee takes the view, as Higgins has noted,¹³⁷ that:

“external self-determination requires a state to take action in its foreign policy consistent with the attainment of self-determination in the remaining areas of colonial or racist occupation. But internal self-determination is directed to their own peoples”.

¹³⁴ Self-Determination, op.cit., p. 101.

¹³⁵ See in particular D.McGoldrick, The Human Rights Committee, Oxford, 1994, chapter 5; Cassese, Self-Determination, op.cit., p. 59 and following, and M.Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, CCPR Commentary, Kehl, 2nd edn., 2005, part 1.

¹³⁶ General Comment 12: see HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, p. 12, 1994. However, the principle is seen as a collective one and not one that individuals could seek to enforce through the individual petition procedures provided in the First Optional Protocol to the Covenant, see e.g. See the Kitok case, Report of the Human Rights Committee, A/43/40, pp. 221, 228; the Lubicon Lake Band case, A/45/40, vol. II, pp. 1, 27; and RL v. Canada, A/47/40, pp. 358. 365. However, in Mahuika et al. v. New Zealand, the Committee took the view that the provisions of article 1 may be relevant in the interpretation of other rights protected by the Covenant, in particular article 27 on the rights of persons belonging to minorities, A/56/40, vol. II, annex X, A. See also Diergaardt et al. v. Namibia, A/55/40, vol. II, annex IX, sect. M, para. 10.3.

¹³⁷ R.Higgins, “Postmodern Tribalism and the Right to Secession” in C.Brölmann, R.Lefebber and M.Zieck (eds.), Peoples and Minorities in International Law, Dordrecht, 1993, p. 31.

120. In its discussion of self-determination, the Committee has encouraged states parties to provide in their reports details about participation in social and political structures,¹³⁸ and in engaging in dialogue with representatives of states parties, questions are regularly posed as to how political institutions operate and how the people of the state concerned participate in the governance of their state.¹³⁹ This necessarily links in with consideration of other articles of the Covenant concerning, for example, freedom of expression (article 19), freedom of assembly (article 21), freedom of association (article 22) and the right to take part in the conduct of public affairs and to vote (article 25). The right of self-determination, therefore, provides the overall framework for the consideration of the principles relating to democratic governance.

121. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination adopted General Recommendation 21 in 1996 in which it similarly divided self-determination into an external and an internal aspect. The former:

“implies that all peoples have the right to determine freely their political status and their place in the international community based upon the principle of equal rights and exemplified by the liberation of peoples from colonialism and by the prohibition to subject peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation”, while the latter referred to the:

“right of every citizen to take part in the conduct of public affairs at any level. In that respect there exists a link with the right of every citizen to take part in the conduct of public affairs at any level...”.¹⁴⁰

122. The issue was touched upon by the Canadian Supreme Court in the Quebec Secession case, where it was noted that self-determination “is normally fulfilled through internal self-determination – a people’s pursuit of its political, economic, social and cultural development within the framework of an existing state”.¹⁴¹

¹³⁸ See e.g. the report of Colombia, CCPR/C/64/Add.3, pp. 9 ff., 1991. In the third periodic report of Peru, it was noted that the first paragraph of article 1 of the Covenant “lays down the right of every people to self-determination. Under that right any people is able to decide freely on its political and economic condition or regime and hence establish a form of government suitable for the purposes in view”, CCPR/C/83/Add.1, 1995, p. 4.

¹³⁹ See e.g. with regard to Canada, A/46/40, p. 12. See also A/45/40, pp. 120–1, with regard to Zaire.

¹⁴⁰ A/51/18.

¹⁴¹ [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, para. 126. Emphasis in original.

ii) Minorities

123. The international protection of minorities has gone through various guises.¹⁴² After the First World War and the collapse of the German, Ottoman, Russian and Austro-Hungarian Empires coupled with the rise of a number of independent nation-based states in Eastern and Central Europe, series of arrangements were made to protect the rights of those racial, religious or linguistic minority groups to whom sovereignty and statehood could not be granted.¹⁴³ Such provisions constituted obligations of international concern and could not be altered without the assent of a majority of the League of Nations Council. The Council was to take action in the event of any infraction of minorities' obligations. There also existed a petition procedure by minorities to the League, although they had no standing as such before the Council or the Permanent Court of International Justice.¹⁴⁴ After the Second World War, the focus shifted to the international protection of universal individual human rights, although several instruments dealing with specific situations incorporated provisions concerning the protection of minorities.¹⁴⁵

124. It was with the adoption of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in 1966 that the question of minority rights came back onto the international agenda. Article 27 of this Covenant provides that “[i]n those states in which ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities exist, persons belonging to such minorities shall not be denied the right, in community with the other members of their group, to enjoy their own culture, to profess and practise their own religion, or to use their own language”. This cautious formulation made it clear that such minority rights adhered to the members of such groups and not to the groups themselves, while the framework for the operation of the provision was that of the state itself. The Committee adopted a General Comment on article 27 in 1994 after much discussion.¹⁴⁶ The General Comment pointed to the distinction between the rights of persons belonging to minorities on the one hand, and the right to self-determination and the right to equality and non-discrimination on the other. It was particularly emphasised that the rights under article 27 did not prejudice the sovereignty and territorial integrity of states.

125. The UN General Assembly adopted a Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities in December 1992. Article 1 provides that states “shall protect the existence and the national or ethnic, cultural, religious and linguistic identity

¹⁴² See e.g. M.Weller, Universal Minority Rights: A Commentary on the Jurisprudence of International Courts and Treaty Bodies, Oxford, 2007; R.Higgins, “Minority Rights: Discrepancies and Divergencies Between the International Covenant and the Council of Europe System” in Liber Amicorum for Henry Schermers, Dordrecht, 1994, p. 193; P.Thornberry, International Law and Minorities, Oxford, 1991; H.Hannum (ed.), Documents on Autonomy and Minority Rights, Dordrecht, 1993; J.Rehman, The Weakness in the International Protection of Minority Rights, The Hague, 2000; and the Capotorti Study on the Rights of Persons Belonging to Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, E/CN.4/Sub.2/384/Rev.1, 1979.

¹⁴³ See, generally, Thornberry, International Law and Minorities, pp. 38 ff.

¹⁴⁴ See e.g. the Capotorti Report, op.cit., pp. 20–2.

¹⁴⁵ See e.g. Annex IV of the Treaty of Peace with Italy, 1947; the Indian–Pakistan Treaty, 1950, and article 7 of the Austrian State Treaty, 1955. See also the provisions in the documents concerning the independence of Cyprus, Cmnd 1093, 1960.

¹⁴⁶ General Comment No. 23, HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, p. 38.

of minorities within their respective territories” (emphasis added) and shall adopt appropriate legislative and other measures to achieve these ends. The Declaration states inter alia that persons belonging to minorities have the right to enjoy their own culture, practice and profess their own religion and to use their own language in private and in public without hindrance. Such persons also have the right to participate effectively in cultural, social, economic and public life. However, the Declaration concludes by explicitly stating that “[n]othing in the present Declaration may be construed as permitting any activity contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations, including sovereign equality, territorial integrity and political independence of states”.¹⁴⁷

126. In similar vein, the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities, adopted by the Council of Europe in 1995, establishes as its aim, as expressed in the preamble, “the effective protection of national minorities and of the rights and freedoms of persons belonging to those minorities, within the rule of law, respecting the territorial integrity and national sovereignty of states”, while specifically providing that “[n]othing in the present framework Convention shall be interpreted as implying any right to engage in any activity or perform any act contrary to the fundamental principles of international law and in particular of the sovereign equality, territorial integrity and political independence of states”.

iii) Indigenous Peoples

127. International law has also concerned itself increasingly with the special position of indigenous peoples.¹⁴⁸ While recognizing the special position of such peoples with regard to the territory with which they have long been associated, relevant international instruments have consistently constrained the rights accepted or accorded with reference to the need to respect the territorial integrity of the state in which such peoples live. Convention No. 169 on Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries, adopted by the International Labour Organisation in 1989, underlined in its preamble the aspirations of indigenous peoples “to exercise control over their own institutions, ways of life and economic development and to maintain and develop their identities, languages and religions, within the framework of the states in which they live” (emphasis added).

128. A Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples was adopted by the United Nations in 2007.¹⁴⁹ The Declaration, noting that indigenous peoples have the right to the full enjoyment, as a collective or as individuals, of all human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognized in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and international human rights law, specifically recognised their right to self-determination.¹⁵⁰ In exercising their right to self-determination, it was noted that indigenous peoples have the right to autonomy or self-government in matters relating to their internal and local affairs, as well as ways and means for financing their autonomous functions.¹⁵¹ While thus essentially defining the meaning of self-determination for indigenous peoples, the point was underlined in article 46 (1) that:

¹⁴⁷ Article 8 (4).

¹⁴⁸ See e.g. P.Thornberry, Indigenous Peoples and Human Rights, Manchester, 2002; S.Marquardt, “International Law and Indigenous Peoples”, 3 International Journal on Group Rights, 1995, p. 47; R.Barsh, “Indigenous Peoples: An Emerging Object of International Law”, 80 American Journal of International Law, 1986, p. 369; J.Anaya, Indigenous Peoples in International Law, Oxford, 2nd edn., 2004, and G.Bennett, Aboriginal Rights in International Law, London, 1978. See also Justice Pending: Indigenous Peoples and Other Good Causes (eds. G.Alfredsson and M.Stavropoulou), The Hague, 2002.

¹⁴⁹ General Assembly resolution 61/295.

“Nothing in this Declaration may be interpreted as implying for any state, people, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act contrary to the Charter of the United Nations or construed as authorizing or encouraging any action which would dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign and independent states”.

e) Self-Determination Reinforces the Sovereign Equality and Territorial Integrity of States

129. The relevant formulation in the UN Charter provides in article 1 (2) that one of the purposes of the organisation is to “develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples”, while article 55 refers to “peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples”. Although the terminology is somewhat unclear, the only logical interpretation of this phrase is that friendly relations as between states (since in the Charter the term “nations” bears this meaning)¹⁵² should proceed on the basis of respect for the principles of equal rights of states, being a long-established principle of international law. The reference to the self-determination of peoples appears in the Charter to refer either to the population of a member-state of the UN¹⁵³ or to the population of a non-self-governing or trust territory.¹⁵⁴ Accordingly, the principle of self-determination as it has been enshrined in the UN Charter may be interpreted as reinforcing the principle of respect for the territorial integrity of states since it constitutes a reaffirmation of the principle of sovereign equality as well as that of colonial territories mutatis mutandis. This in turn underlined the principle of non-intervention by states into the domestic affairs of other states.

130. Kelsen emphasised that self-determination as expressed in the Charter simply underlined the concept of the sovereignty of states. He noted that since the “self-determination of the people usually designated a principle of internal policy, the principle of democratic government” and article 1(2) referred to relations among states, and since “the terms ‘peoples’ too ... in connection with ‘equal ¹⁵⁰ Articles 1 and 3.

¹⁵¹ Article 4. The Declaration also noted that indigenous peoples have the right to maintain and strengthen their distinctive political, economic, social and cultural characteristics, as well as their legal systems, while retaining the right to participate fully in the life of the state (article 5), the right to a nationality (article 6), and the collective right to live in freedom and security as distinct peoples free from any act of genocide or violence (article 7 (2)). They also have the right not to be subjected to forced assimilation or destruction of their culture (article 8).

¹⁵² See in addition to the title of the organisation (“United Nations”) and the articles cited above, the preamble and article 14.

¹⁵³ Note the reference at the start of the preamble to “We, the Peoples of the United Nations” and later to “our respective Governments” establishing the UN.

¹⁵⁴ See articles 73 and 76 respectively.

rights' means probably states since only states have 'equal rights' according to general international law... then the self-determination of peoples in article 1(2) can mean only sovereignty of the states".¹⁵⁵ While this view may now in hindsight be seen as unduly cautious, the fact that self-determination acts to reinforce the principles of the sovereign equality of states and of non-intervention is undiminished. Indeed, Higgins has written that:

"In both article 1 (2) and article 55, the context seems to be the right of the peoples of one state to be protected from interference by other states or governments".¹⁵⁶

131. Further, in the decolonisation context, since self-determination has been understood to mean that the people of the colonially defined unit may freely determine their political status (up to and including independence) but within that colonial framework, unless the UN has otherwise accepted that the peoples within the territory cannot live within one state and that this situation has produced a threat to peace and security,¹⁵⁷ then one consequence of the exercise of self-determination is to forge the territorial extent of the newly created state, which is then protected by the application additionally of the principle of respect for its territorial integrity.

f) Self-Determination Does Not Authorise Secession

(a) The General Principle

132. Outside of the special context of decolonisation, which may or may not be seen as a form of "secession", international law is unambiguous in not providing for a right of secession from independent states. The practice surveyed above in section A.I on the fundamental norm of territorial integrity demonstrates this clearly. Indeed, such a norm would be of little value were a right to secession under international law be recognised as applying to independent states.

133. The UN has always strenuously opposed any attempt at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a state. Point 6 of the Colonial Declaration 1960, for example, emphasised that:

"Any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations",

¹⁵⁵ Law of the United Nations (1950), pp. 51-3. See also pp. 29-32. See, generally, Schwelb, "The International Court of Justice and the Human Rights Clauses of the Charter", 66 American Journal of International Law, 1972, p. 337. In his report to Commission I, the Rapporteur noted that it was understood that the "principle of equal rights of peoples and that of self-determination are two component elements of one norm". Summary Reports of Committee I/I DOC.I/I/1 of 16 May 1945, 6 UNCIO Docs., p. 296.

¹⁵⁶ "Self-Determination and Secession" in J.Dahlitz (ed.), Secession and International Law, New York, 2003, pp. 21, 23. See also T. M.Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990, p. 153 and following and Franck, "Fairness in the International Legal and Institutional System", 240 HR, 1993 III, pp. 13, 127-49.

¹⁵⁷ See above, para. 95.

while the preamble to the Declaration on Principles of International Law 1970 included the following paragraphs:

“Recalling the duty of States to refrain in their international relations from military, political, economic or any other form of coercion aimed against the political independence or territorial integrity of any State,

Considering it essential that all States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations, Convinced in consequence that any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a State or country or at its political independence is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter”.

134. In addition, it was specifically noted that:

“Every State shall refrain from any action aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of any other State or country”.

135. This approach has also been underlined in regional instruments. For example, article III (3) of the OAU Charter emphasises the principle of “Respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State and for its inalienable right to independent existence”, while Principle VIII of the Helsinki Final Act noted that:

“The participating States will respect the equal rights of peoples and their rights to self-determination, acting all times in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and with the relevant norms of international law, including those relating to the territorial integrity of States”.¹⁵⁸

136. In addition, the Charter of Paris 1990 declared that the participating states:

“reaffirm the equal rights of peoples and their right to self-determination in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with the relevant norms of international law, including those relating to the territorial integrity of states”.

¹⁵⁸ Principle IV on the Territorial Integrity of States underlined respect for this principle, noting that the participating states “will refrain from any action inconsistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations against the territorial integrity, political independence or the unity of any participating state”, see above, para. 38.

137. International practice demonstrates that self-determination has not been interpreted to mean that any group defining itself as such can decide for itself its own political status up to and including secession from an already independent State.¹⁵⁹ The UN Secretary-General has emphasised that:

“as an international organisation, the United Nations has never accepted and does not accept and I do not believe it will ever accept the principle of secession of a part of a member State”.¹⁶⁰

138. The Yugoslav Arbitration Commission underlined in Opinion No. 2 that:

“whatever the circumstances, the right to self-determination must not involve changes to existing frontiers at the time of independence (uti possidetis juris) except where the states concerned agree otherwise”,¹⁶¹

while, the Canadian Supreme Court concluded in the Quebec Secession case that:

“international law expects that the right to self-determination will be exercised by peoples within the framework of existing sovereign states and consistently with the maintenance of the territorial integrity of those states... The international law principle of self-determination has evolved within a framework of respect for the territorial integrity of existing states. The various international documents that support the existence of a people's right to self-determination also contain parallel statements supportive of the conclusion that the exercise of such a right must be sufficiently limited to prevent threats to an existing state's territorial integrity or the stability of relations between sovereign states”.¹⁶²

139. Leading writers have come to the same general conclusion. Cassese has written that:

“Ever since the emergence of the political principle of self-determination on the international scene, states have been adamant in rejecting even the possibility that nations, groups and minorities be granted a right to secede from the territory in which they live. Territorial integrity and sovereign rights have consistently been regarded as of paramount importance; indeed they have been considered as concluding debate on the subject”.¹⁶³

¹⁵⁹ See e.g. H.Hannum, Autonomy, Sovereignty and Self-Determination, Pennsylvania, 1990, p. 469; Higgins, op.cit., p. 121; Franck, Fairness, op.cit. p. 149 et seq. and Cassese, op.cit., p. 122.

¹⁶⁰ UN Monthly Chronicle (February 1970), p. 36. See also the comment by the UK Foreign Minister that “it is widely accepted at the United Nations that the right of self-determination does not give every distinct group or territorial sub-division within a state the right to secede from it and thereby dismember the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign independents”, 54 BYIL, 1983, p. 409.

¹⁶¹ 92 ILR, p. 168.

¹⁶² [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, paras. 122 and 127.

¹⁶³ Op.cit., p. 122.

140. That author concluded with the observation that:

“the international body of legal norms on self-determination does not encompass any rule granting ethnic groups and minorities the right to secede with a view to becoming a separate and distinct international entity”.¹⁶⁴

141. Crawford has written that:

“Since 1945 the international community has been extremely reluctant to accept unilateral secession of parts of independent states if the secession is opposed by the government of that state. In such cases the principle of territorial integrity has been a significant limitation. Since 1945 no state which has been created by unilateral secession has been admitted to the United Nations against the declared wishes of the predecessor state”.¹⁶⁵

142. He has concluded as follows:

“To summarise, outside of the colonial context, the principle of self-determination is not recognised as giving rise to unilateral rights of secession by parts of independent states... State practice since 1945 shows the extreme reluctance of states to recognise unilateral secession outside of the colonial context. That practice has not changed since 1989, despite the emergence during that period of twenty-three new states. On the contrary, the practice has been powerfully reinforced”.¹⁶⁶

(b) The Reverse Argument – The “Saving” or “Safeguard” Clause of the Declaration on Principles of International Law 1970

143. The 1970 on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations contains in its section on self-determination the following provision:

“Nothing in the foregoing paragraph shall be construed as authorising or encouraging any action which would dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign and independent states conducting themselves in compliance with the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples as described above and thus possessed of a government representing the whole people belonging to the territory without distinction as to race, creed or colour”.¹⁶⁷

¹⁶⁴ Ibid., p. 339.

¹⁶⁵ Op.cit., p. 390.

¹⁶⁶ Ibid., p. 415.

¹⁶⁷ See also the similar clause in the Vienna Declaration of the UN World Conference on Human Rights 1993.

144. The thrust of this clause is to reinforce the primacy of the principle of territorial integrity and political unity of sovereign and independent states, while reaffirming the importance of states conducting themselves in accordance with the principle of self-determination. The primary starting-point is clearly the principle of territorial integrity, for its significance is of the essence in the clause in prohibiting action to affect in any way detrimentally the territorial integrity of states. Further, it is to be noted that this clause is immediately followed by the statement that “[e]very State shall refrain from any action aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of any other State or country”. This provision is laid down without condition or provision, nor is expressed as being contingent upon any particular factual situation. The concordance can hardly be coincidental.

145. Secondly, the clause provides a definition of the principle of self-determination in terms of the representative and non-discriminatory requirement of government so that a people validly exercise such right by participation in the governance of the state in question on a basis of equality. This is a clear reference to “internal self-determination” as it has been analysed and recognised by the Human Rights Committee in its implementation of article 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights expressing the right of all peoples to self-determination.

146. However, some have drawn the inference by way of reverse or a contrario argument that states that are not conducting themselves in accordance with the principle of self-determination are not therefore protected by the principle of territorial integrity, thus providing for a right of secession. Even those writers that do draw this conclusion express themselves in extremely cautious and hesitant terms. Cassese, for example, concludes that:

“a racial or religious group may attempt secession, a form of external self-determination, when it is apparent that internal self-determination is absolutely beyond reach. Extreme and unremitting persecution and the lack of any reasonable prospect for peaceful challenge may make secession legitimate”,¹⁶⁸

while Crawford has noted that:

“it is arguable that, in extreme cases of oppression, international law allows remedial secession to discrete peoples within a state and that the ‘safeguard clauses’ in the Friendly Relations Declaration and the Vienna Declaration recognise this, even if indirectly”.¹⁶⁹

147. The Canadian Supreme Court in the Quebec Secession case mentioned the issue, noting that it was unclear whether the reverse argument actually reflected an “established international law standard” and in any event concluding that it was irrelevant to the Quebec situation.¹⁷⁰

¹⁶⁸ Op.cit., p. 120.

¹⁶⁹ Op.cit., p. 119.

¹⁷⁰ [1998] 2 S.C.R. 217, para. 135.

148. A more general comment should be made. It would be extremely unusual for a major change in legal principle such as the legitimation of the right to secession from an independent state, even in extreme conditions, to be introduced by way of an ambiguous subordinate clause phrased in a negative way, especially when the principle of territorial integrity has been accepted and proclaimed as a core principle of international law. Further the principle of territorial integrity is repeated both before the qualifying clause in the provision in question and indeed in the immediately following paragraph. It is also to be underlined that the 1970 Declaration provides that each principle contained in the Declaration is to be interpreted in the context of the other principles and that all these principles are interrelated. The principle of sovereign equality includes the unconditional provision that “[t]he territorial integrity and political independence of the State are inviolable”. Accordingly, it is hard to conclude that the “saving” or “safeguard” clause so indirectly provides such an important exception to the principle of territorial integrity.

149. Additionally, actual practice demonstrating the successful application of this proposition is lacking, even when expressed as restricted to “extreme” persecution. This is particularly so where the governing norm of respect for the territorial integrity of states is so deeply established.

C. Armenia’s Revisionist Claims and Responses Thereto

150. Armenia’s revisionist claims with regard to self-determination and territorial integrity proceed as follows.¹⁷¹

a) Prior to Azerbaijan’s Independence

151. Armenia makes a series of historical assertions. It claims that Nagorny Karabakh was arbitrarily placed in the Soviet Republic of Azerbaijan on 5 July 1921 with the status of an autonomous region. Within the Soviet Union, it is claimed, the Nagorny Karabakh Autonomous Region (Oblast) was subject to pressures aimed at reducing the ethnic Armenian population.¹⁷² However, it is well known that Nagorny Karabakh has been part of Azerbaijan for centuries and, owing to the territorial claims of Armenia, the decision was taken on 5 July 1921 to leave Nagorny Karabakh within Azerbaijan.¹⁷³ Moreover, it is also well documented that the region possessed all essential elements of self-

¹⁷¹ See e.g. Armenia’s Initial Report to the Human Rights Committee, CCPR/C/92/Add.2, 30 April 1998; and Armenia’s Initial Report to the Committee on the Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, E/1990/5/Add.36, 9 December 1998. See also S.Avakian, “Nagorno-Karabagh: Legal Aspects”, 2005, appearing on the website of the Armenian Foreign Ministry, <http://www.armenianforeignministry.com/fr/nk/legalaspects/legalaspect_text.pdf> and the Note Verbale from the Permanent Mission of Armenia to the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights entitled “The Right of Peoples to Self-Determination and Its Application to Peoples under Colonial or Alien Domination or Foreign Occupation”, E/CN.4/2005/G/23, 22 March 2005, which is essentially the same document minus annexes.

¹⁷² See e.g. Note Verbale, op.cit., p. 4 and Initial Report to the Human Rights Committee, op.cit., pp. 6-7.

¹⁷³ Extract from the Protocol of the plenary session of the Caucasian Bureau of the Central Committee of the Russian Communist Party (Bolsheviks) of 5 July 1921, in “To the History of Formation of the Nagorny Karabakh Autonomous Oblast of the Azerbaijan SSR. 1918-1925: Documents and Materials”, Baku, 1989, p. 92.

government and even developed more rapidly than Azerbaijan as a whole. Nonetheless, whatever the truth of Armenia's assertions, they cannot affect the legal position as it existed during the critical period leading up to and including the independence of Azerbaijan nor the legal position after such independence, otherwise the international community would be faced with scores of revisionist claims based upon historical arguments.

152. Armenia claims that the key to the legal situation is the period commencing 20 February 1988, when a session of the twentieth convocation of delegates of the Nagorny Karabakh Autonomous Region adopted a resolution seeking the transfer of the region from Azerbaijan to Armenia (within the USSR). This was accepted by the Supreme Soviet of the Armenian SSR on 15 June 1988. On 12 July 1988, the eighth session of the twentieth convocation of delegates of the Nagorny Karabakh Autonomous Region passed a resolution on the secession of the region from Azerbaijan. This was confirmed on 16 August 1989 at the "congress of plenipotentiary representatives of the population of Nagorny Karabakh", while on 1 December 1989, the Supreme Soviet of the Armenian SSR adopted a resolution calling for the "reunification" of the Armenian SSR and Nagorny Karabakh. On 2 September 1991, "the local councils" of Nagorny Karabakh adopted a "Declaration of Independence of the Republic of Nagorno-Karabakh". This was confirmed by a "referendum" held in Nagorny Karabakh on 10 December 1991. On 28 December that year, "elections" were held in the territory and on 6 January 1992, the newly convened "parliament" adopted a "Declaration of Independence", followed two days later by the adoption of a "Constitutional Law 'On Basic Principles of the State Independence of Nagorny Karabakh Republic'".¹⁷⁴

153. Armenia's view is that "[o]n the date the Republic of Azerbaijan obtained its recognition, the Republic of Nagorny Karabakh no longer formed part of it",¹⁷⁵ while the process by which this entity became independent reflected the right of self-determination.¹⁷⁶

154. However, this approach is fundamentally flawed. The following points need to be made bearing in mind the analysis of the relevant concepts made earlier in this Report.

155. First, the critical period for the purposes of uti possidetis and thus the legitimate inheritance of territorial frontiers is the period around independence. The International Court has made this very clear. In Burkina Faso/Mali, it was stated that:¹⁷⁷

"The essence of this principle [uti possidetis] lies in its primary aim of securing respect for the territorial boundaries at the moment when independence is achieved", and further, that:¹⁷⁸

¹⁷⁴ See Note Verbale, op.cit., pp. 7-9.

¹⁷⁵ See Initial Report to the Human Rights Committee, op.cit., p. 8.

¹⁷⁶ "Nagorno-Karabagh: Legal Aspects", op.cit., p. 20.

¹⁷⁷ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 566. This was reaffirmed in El Salvador/Honduras, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 386-7.

¹⁷⁸ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 568.

“By becoming independent, a new state acquires sovereignty with the territorial base and boundaries left to it by the colonial power. This is part of the ordinary operation of the machinery of state succession. International law - and consequently the principle of uti possidetis - applies to the new state (as a state) not with retroactive effect, but immediately and from that moment onwards. It applies to the state as it is, i.e., to the ‘photograph’ of the territorial situation then existing. The principle of uti possidetis freezes the territorial title; it stops the clock, but does not put back the hands” (emphasis in original).

156. What mattered, therefore, was the frontier “which existed at the moment of independence”.¹⁷⁹ Insofar as the Nagorny Karabakh situation is concerned, this must be 18 October 1991, the date of independence of the Republic of Azerbaijan confirmed at the referendum held on 29 December 1991. Accordingly, the situation as at that date must be examined.

157. Secondly, the applicable law governing the application of uti possidetis, being the rule determining the territorial boundaries of an entity upon independence is the constitutional law of the former or predecessor state for it is primarily with respect to the valid titles established under that system that one can identify the relevant administrative line.

158. The Chamber in Burkina Faso/Mali noted that the determination of the relevant frontier line had to be appraised in the light of French colonial law since the line in question had been an entirely internal administrative border within French West Africa. As such it was defined not by international law, but by the French legislation applicable to such territories.¹⁸⁰ This approach was reinforced in the El Salvador/Honduras case, where the Chamber stated that “when the principle of uti possidetis juris is involved, the jus referred to is not international law but the constitutional or administrative law of the pre-independence sovereign”.¹⁸¹

159. Accordingly, the application of the principle of uti possidetis is conditioned upon the constitutional position as at the moment of independence with regard to the administrative boundaries in question. In this sense, the position as far as Azerbaijan is concerned is clear. The attempts made by the Armenians of Nagorny Karabakh and Armenia to alter the line (or remove Nagorny Karabakh from the recognised territory of Azerbaijan) were not accepted either by Azerbaijan or by the authorities of the USSR at the relevant time. On 18 July 1988, the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR (faced with the request of the convocation of delegates of the Nagorny Karabakh Autonomous Region of 20 February that year to join Armenia, the refusal of this by Azerbaijan on 13 and 17 June and the support of the request by Armenia on 15 June) decided to leave the territory within the Azerbaijan SSR. The decisions on unilateral secession of Nagorny Karabakh of 12 July 1988 and 16 August 1989 were refused by Azerbaijan on 12 July 1988 and 26 August 1989

¹⁷⁹ Ibid., p. 570.

¹⁸⁰ Ibid., p. 568. The situation is slightly different where the boundaries in question were constituted by international agreement prior to independence, rather than where, as here, the relevant boundaries were prior to independence internal or administrative lines of the predecessor state.

¹⁸¹ ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 559.

respectively.¹⁸² On 20 January 1989, the Supreme Soviet of the USSR established a special authority for the territory under the direct authority of the central government, but replaced this on 28 November 1989 with a “Republican Organisational Committee” of the Azerbaijan SSR.¹⁸³

160. On 1 December 1989, the Supreme Soviet of Armenia adopted a resolution calling for the reunification of the Armenian SSR with Nagorny Karabakh.¹⁸⁴ However, on 10 January 1990, the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR adopted a resolution on the “Nonconformity With the USSR Constitution of the Acts on Nagorny Karabakh Adopted by the Armenian SSR Supreme Soviet on 1 December 1989 and 9 January 1990”, declaring the illegality of the proposed unification of Armenia with Nagorny Karabakh without the consent of the Azerbaijan SSR.¹⁸⁵ On 30 August 1991, the Azerbaijan SSR adopted a Declaration on the restoration of state independence of Azerbaijan and on 18 October 1991 and 29 December 1991, this was officially confirmed.

161. Unlike all previous decisions taken by the Armenian side on Nagorny Karabakh, the proclamation on 2 September 1991 of the “Republic of Nagorny Karabakh” was argued by the Law of the USSR “On the Procedures for Resolving Questions Related to the Secession of Union Republics from the USSR” of 3 April 1990.¹⁸⁶

162. The purpose of this Law was to regulate mutual relations within the framework of the USSR by establishing a specific procedure to be followed by Union Republics in the event of their secession from the USSR. A decision by a Union Republic to secede had to be based on the will of the people of the Republic freely expressed through a referendum, subject to authorization by the Supreme Soviet of the Union Republic. At the same time, according to this Law, in a Union Republic containing autonomous entities, the referendum had to be held separately in each entity in order to decide independently the question of staying in the USSR or in the seceding Union Republic, as well as to raise the question of its own state-legal status. Moreover, the Law provided that in a Union Republic, whose territory included areas with concentration of national groups that made up the majority of the population in a given locality, the results of the voting in those localities had to be considered separately during the determination of the referendum results. The secession of a Union Republic from the USSR could be regarded valid only after the fulfillment of complicated and multi-staged procedures and, finally, the adoption of the relevant decision by the Congress of the USSR People’s Deputies.

163. In reality, as Cassese pointed out, “the law made it extremely difficult for republics successfully to negotiate the entire secession process” and thus “clearly failed to meet international standards on self-determination”. The same author concludes with the observation that “[t]he Law [of 3 April 1990]

¹⁸² See Bulletin of the Supreme Soviet of the Azerbaijan SSR, 1988, No. 13-14, pp. 14-15 and Bulletin of the Supreme Soviet of the Azerbaijan SSR, 1989, No. 15-16, pp. 21-22.

¹⁸³ See “Nagorno-Karabagh: Legal Aspects”, op.cit., pp. 9-10 and Note Verbale, op.cit., p. 5.

¹⁸⁴ Ibid.

¹⁸⁵ See Bulletin of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, 1990, No. 3, p. 38.

¹⁸⁶ See Bulletin of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, 1990, No. 15, pp. 303-308.

made the whole process of possible secession from the Soviet Union so cumbersome and complicated, that one may wonder whether it ultimately constituted a true application of self-determination or was rather intended to pose a set of insurmountable hurdles to the implementation of that principle”.¹⁸⁷ It is therefore curious to hear this Act being invoked against the background of claims to application of the right of peoples to self-determination, since that is precisely what the Law limited.

164. For these reasons, the Law of 3 April 1990 was never applied. Instead, it was rapidly superseded by the dramatic events in the USSR and forfeited not only its urgency but also legal effect before the Soviet Union ceased to exist as international legal person. Cassese has written that the “process of independence by the twelve republics ... occurred outside the realm of law ...” and “was precipitated by the political crisis at the centre of the Soviet Union and the correlative increase in the strength of centrifugal forces” (emphasis in original).¹⁸⁸

165. In other words, on the eve of the independence of Azerbaijan, the unlawfulness within the Soviet legal system of any unification of Nagorny Karabakh with Armenia without Azerbaijan’s consent was confirmed at the highest constitutional level. Azerbaijan did not so consent, so that the definition of the territory of Azerbaijan as it proceeded to independence and in the light of the applicable law clearly included the territory of Nagorny Karabakh. Accordingly, the factual basis for the operation of the legal principle of uti possidetis is beyond dispute in this case. Azerbaijan was entitled to come to independence within the territorial boundaries that it was recognised as having as the Azerbaijan SSR within the USSR.

166. It follows from this that Armenia’s claims as to the claimed “independence” or “reunification” of Nagorny Karabakh are contrary to the internationally accepted principle of uti possidetis and therefore unsustainable in international law.

167. Finally, Armenia’s arguments that Azerbaijan proclamation that it succeeded to the 1918-20 state of Azerbaijan¹⁸⁹ meant that Azerbaijan succeeded to the boundaries of its former incarnation is equally fallacious. It is one thing to claim succession to a former legal personality, something which would mean more in political than in legal terms, it is quite another to argue that such a process would mean a reversion to territorial boundaries. If accepted as a rule of international law, it would run counter to all understanding of the principle of self-determination and lead to considerable uncertainty as states sought to redefine their territorial extent in the light of former entities to which they may be able to claim succession.¹⁹⁰ Further, such an approach would reduce the principle of territorial integrity to a fiction, since states could challenge and seek to extend their boundaries and claim areas legitimately in the territory of other states on the basis of such reversionary irredentism. It would also mean that the principle of uti possidetis would be subject to a considerable exception. It is a doctrine with no support in international law in the light of its considerable inherent dangers.

¹⁸⁷ Cassese, Self-Determination, op.cit., pp. 264-265.

¹⁸⁸ Ibid., p. 266.

¹⁸⁹ See e.g. the terms of the Declaration of 30 August 1991 and article 2 of the Declaration of 18 October 1991.

¹⁹⁰ See e.g. M.N.Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, Oxford, 1986, chapter 4.

b) After Azerbaijan's Independence

168. The claims made by Armenia insofar as they relate to the period prior to the independence of Azerbaijan are contrary to international law. However, claims have been made in relation to the post-independence period and these are similarly unlawful as amounting to a violation of the principle of the respect for the territorial integrity of sovereign states.

169. On 10 December 1991, Nagorny Karabakh held a “referendum on independence” (without the support or consent of independent Azerbaijan of which it legally constituted a part) which was confirmed two days later by an “Act on the Results of the Referendum on the Independence of the Republic of Nagorny Karabakh”. On 28 December 1991, “parliamentary elections” were held in the territory and on 6 January 1992 the newly convened “parliament” adopted a “Declaration of Independence”. On the same day, the “Supreme Council of Nagorny Karabakh” adopted a “Declaration on State Independence of the Republic of Nagorny Karabakh”.¹⁹¹ Thus, the process of secession from Azerbaijan was instituted. This was claimed to be on the basis of the right to self-determination.¹⁹²

170. This assertion of secession from an independent Azerbaijan on the grounds of self-determination contradicts the universally accepted norm of territorial integrity, as discussed earlier in this Report. Not only has Azerbaijan not consented to this secession (indeed it has constantly and continuously protested against it), but no state in the international community has recognised the “Republic of Nagorny Karabakh” as independent, not even Armenia, even though Armenia provides indispensable economic, political and military sustenance without which that entity could not exist.

D. Conclusions

171. The following general conclusions may be drawn from the above analysis:

- 1) The principle of respect for the territorial integrity of states constitutes a foundational norm in international law buttressed by a vast array of international, regional and bilateral practice, not least in the United Nations.
- 2) The territorial integrity norm may well constitute a rule of jus cogens.
- 3) The territorial integrity norm reflects and sustains the principle of sovereign equality.
- 4) The territorial integrity norm is reflected in a range of associated and derivative international legal principles, the most important of which is the prohibition of the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity of states, which is without dispute a rule of jus cogens.
- 5) A related principle of territorial integrity, that of uti possidetis juris, provides for the territorial definition of entities as they move to independence.

¹⁹¹ Note Verbale, op.cit., p. 8. Note that on 23 November 1991, faced with rising unrest, Azerbaijan removed Nagorny Karabakh's autonomy, ibid., p. 9.

¹⁹² See “Nagorno-Karabagh: Legal Aspects”, op.cit., p. 20.

- 6) This principle of uti possidetis applies to new states, irrespective of colonial or other origins, and asserts that absent consent to the contrary, a new state will come to independence in the boundaries that it possessed as a non-independent entity.
- 7) The principle of self-determination exists as a rule of international law. As such it provides for the independence of colonial territories and for the participation of peoples in the governance of their states within the territorial framework of such states. The principle of self-determination also has an application in the case of foreign occupations and acts to sustain the integrity of existing states.
- 8) The principle of self-determination cannot be interpreted to include a right in international law of secession (outside of the colonial context).

172. The following particular conclusions may be drawn:

- 1) The principle of uti possidetis establishes that Azerbaijan validly came to independence within the borders that it had under Soviet law in the period preceding its declaration of independence.
- 2) These borders included the territory of Nagorny Karabakh as affirmed by the legitimate authorities of the USSR at the relevant time.
- 3) Azerbaijan has not consented to the removal of Nagorny Karabakh from within its own internationally recognised territorial boundaries.
- 4) Neither the purported unification of Nagorny Karabakh with Armenia nor its purported independence have been recognised by any third state.
- 5) Accordingly, the actions of those in control in Nagorny Karabakh prior to the independence of Azerbaijan offend the principle of uti possidetis and fall to be determined within the legal system of Azerbaijan.
- 6) The inhabitants of Nagorny Karabakh, however, are entitled to the full benefit of international human rights provisions, including the right to self-determination within the boundaries of Azerbaijan. There is no applicable right to secession under international law.
- 7) The actions of those in control in Nagorny Karabakh following the independence of Azerbaijan amount to secessionist activities and fall to be determined within the domestic legal system of Azerbaijan.
- 8) The actions of Armenia, up to and including the resort to force, constitute a violation of the fundamental norm of respect for the territorial integrity of states, as well as a violation of other relevant international legal principles, such as rule prohibiting the use of force.